Committee to Protect Journalists

UN HRC: Universal Periodic Review (Fourth Cycle): Stakeholder Submission: 2022

P.O. Box 2675

New York, NY 10108

General: info@cpj.org

Advocacy Director: gguillenkaiser@cpj.org

Latin America and the Caribbean Program Coordinator: nsouthwick@cpj.org

Brazil Representative: rneder@cpj.org

Brief description of CPJ:

1. The Committee to Protect Journalists is an independent, nonprofit organization that promotes press freedom worldwide. We defend the right of journalists to report the news without fear of reprisal.
2. CPJ is made up of about 40 experts around the world, with headquarters in New York City. When press freedom violations occur, CPJ mobilizes a network of correspondents who report and take action on behalf of those targeted.
3. CPJ's work is based on its research, which provides a global snapshot of obstructions to a free press worldwide. CPJ reports on violations in repressive countries, conflict zones, and established democracies alike. CPJ's research staff document hundreds of attacks on the press each year.

Summary:

4. This report was prepared for the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of Brazil in March 2022. In this document, CPJ assesses the press freedom framework and notes the erosion of journalist safety and press freedom in Brazil.
5. Brazil accepted two recommendations about safety and physical integrity of journalists during its last UPR cycle in 2017. However, as this submission indicates, Brazil has failed to implement those recommendations, and press freedom conditions have only deteriorated since.
6. Journalists in Brazil face threats, online harassment, physical violence, and civil and criminal lawsuits, often for their coverage of sensitive issues. Public officials have increasingly utilized anti-press rhetoric and attempted to limit transparency and access to information throughout the COVID-19 pandemic.
7. Impunity in cases of journalists killed remains extremely high. Crimes against journalists are rarely investigated and perpetrators often go unpunished, fueling the cycle of violence against the press.
8. The legal system is another venue to target journalists and media outlets. Criminal defamation laws are used to harass and imprison journalists, and civil lawsuits demanding content removal and imposing gag orders raise concerns about increasing censorship.
9. In the final section, CPJ makes recommendations to the Brazilian government to improve press freedom conditions and journalist safety.

Legal framework:

10. Article 5 of the Brazilian Constitution ensures “free expression of intellectual, artistic, scientific and communication activity, regardless of censorship or license.”¹ Article 220 ensures freedom of expression and of information, expressly prohibits censorship and affirms that “no law will contain a device that can constitute an embarrassment to the full freedom of journalistic information.”

11. Brazil's Right to Information Law regulates the constitutional right to access public information and defines mechanisms and procedures for these requests and deadlines for authorities to respond².
12. Brazil's penal code defines three types of crimes against honor: slander, defamation, and injury³. According to Article 138, slander consists of attributing a "criminal offense" to another person and is punishable by six months to two years in prison and a fine. Article 139 defines defamation as the attribution to another person of a fact or action that affects that person's reputation and is punishable by three months to one year in prison and a fine. According to Article 140, injury consists of "offending the dignity of another person," and is punishable by one to six months in prison.
13. Article 324 of the Electoral Code establishes that the crime of slander with electoral purposes carries a sentence of six months to two years in prison and a fine.⁴ Article 325 establishes that the crime of defamation with electoral purposes carries a prison sentence of three months to a year, and a fine.
14. Law 13.834, enacted in 2019, added "slanderous denunciation" as a criminal offense under Brazil's electoral code⁵. The law criminalizes knowingly accusing someone of a crime they did not commit, if that accusation leads to a civil or criminal investigation -- a crime already included in the penal code -- and prohibits sharing such accusations "by any means or form." Under both codes, slanderous denunciation is punishable by two to eight years in prison and a fine.

Main submission: Press freedom violations (2017 – 2022)

15. The following submission draws from research conducted by the Committee to Protect Journalists. All CPJ publications on Brazil can be found on the organization's website⁶.

Journalists killed and impunity

16. Since 2017, eight journalists have been killed in Brazil, seven of them in smaller cities or towns outside of major cities or state capitals. CPJ has confirmed that three were targeted for their work: freelance reporter Luís Gustavo da Silva (killed on June 14, 2017)⁷; and radio journalists Jefferson Pureza Lopes (January 17, 2018)⁸ and Jairo Souza (June 21, 2018)⁹.

⁹ "Jairo Souza," CPJ, <https://cpj.org/data/people/jairo-souza/>

17. In the other five cases, the motive remained unconfirmed as of March 2022. The five journalists are Ueliton Bayer Brizon (killed on January 16, 2018)¹⁰; Robson Giorno (May 25, 2019)¹¹; Romário Barros (June 18, 2019)¹²; Leonardo Pinheiro (May 13, 2020)¹³; and Givanildo Oliveira (February 7, 2022)¹⁴.
18. Police systematically fail to investigate killings of journalists to identify those responsible and establish motives, leaving the majority of cases unsolved and unpunished. In 2021, Brazil ranked 8th on CPJ's Global Impunity Index, which calculates the number of unsolved journalist murders as a percentage of each country's population¹⁵.
19. A 2019 report by the National Council of Public Prosecution, which analyzed cases of journalists killed between 1995-2018¹⁶, found that many remain unsolved, such as the February 2014 murder of newspaper reporter Pedro Palma¹⁷.
20. Protracted judicial proceedings and delays in trials present additional barriers to justice. For example, the trial of the accused killers of radio journalist Valério Luiz de Oliveira, murdered in 2012, has been postponed multiple times, though prosecutors initially charged the suspects in 2013¹⁸.

Physical aggression

21. Between January 2017 and February 2022, CPJ documented numerous cases of physical violence against journalists.
22. There were at least 10 shooting attacks targeting journalists, their property or outlets' headquarters:
 - 2017, São Paulo:
 - Attackers shot at political blogger Márcio Prado's car¹⁹.
 - Two photographers were shot at while covering a military police operation in a neighborhood notorious for a high concentration of drug sales and use²⁰.
 - 2018

 - Rondônia: Radio host Hamilton Alves was shot in a drive-by attack²²;
 - Florianópolis: Attackers shot at the building housing VipSocial's editorial offices²³;
 - Ceará: Gunmen entered Radio União FM and shot commentator Sandoval Braga in the leg²⁴.
 - 2020
 - Minas Gerais: A gunman attacked radio journalist Vamberto Teixeira's home²⁵;
 - Bahia: Radio journalist Fábio Márcio was shot²⁶.
 - 2021, Pará: Attackers shot journalist Jackson Silva²⁷.
 - 2022, Bahia: Two men fired at TV Aratu and Band reporting teams in Salvador²⁸.
23. CPJ also documented three cases of arson.
- 2017, São Paulo: Political reporter Rodrigo Lima's car was set on fire outside his office²⁹.
 - 2019, Ceará: Community radio station Aliança FM's antenna was set on fire³⁰.
 - 2021, São Paulo: An attacker set fire to a building housing the Folha da Região offices and editor José Antônio Arantes' home³¹.
24. Other types of violent attacks:
- 2019, Ceará: A bomb exploded at the home of radio reporter Francisco José Jorge de Sousa³².

- Rio de Janeiro: A man briefly held TV Globo reporter Marina Araújo hostage inside the broadcaster’s headquarters³³.
- Amazonas: Several men hit journalist Alex Braga’s car, and punched and threatened him³⁴.
- Roraima: Three men kidnapped journalist Romano dos Anjos, beat him and left him on the city outskirts³⁵.
- 2022, Rio Grande do Sul: Journalist Daniel Carniel was punched and kicked in the Adesso TV office entrance³⁶.

Threats

25. Brazilian authorities’ failure to address threats against journalists has had a chilling effect and permitted some threats to escalate to physical aggression. Since Brazil’s 3rd UPR in 2017, CPJ has documented numerous cases of journalists threatened for covering topics including corruption, politics, crime, policing, and environmental issues.

- 2018
 - Ceará: An attacker threatened and attempted to kidnap Radio Liberdade FM presenter José Ilton dos Santos³⁷.
 - Paraíba: A former city official threatened two radio hosts after they reported on corruption allegations³⁸.
 - Minas Gerais: Attackers threw fireworks at reporter Adenilson Miguel’s home and left a note with a death threat³⁹.
- 2019
 - Rio de Janeiro: The Intercept Brasil’s Glenn Greenwald and Leandro Demori received threatening messages after reporting on officials involved in the “Lava Jato” investigation⁴⁰.
 - Pará: Folha do Progresso reporter Adecio Piran was threatened after reporting on fires in the Amazon rainforest⁴¹.
- 2020, São Paulo: Rádio Nova Brasil host Marco Antônio Ferreira received threatening messages during coverage of municipal elections and after reporting on violations of COVID-19 restrictions. The next month, his car was set on fire⁴².

- 2021, Roraima: TV Norte Boa Vista host Diego Santos received an envelope with a threatening message and two bullets⁴³.
26. While the decision to include journalists in the federal Program of Protection of Human Rights Defenders⁴⁴ in 2018 was an important step toward addressing journalist safety, the program has not been effective in reducing violence and threats. According to a 2021 report from local human rights organizations⁴⁵, the program lacks adequate staffing and resources, is poorly structured, and its protective measures are insufficient and implemented too slowly — issues that predated the incorporation of journalists into the program and which have continued to deteriorate in recent years.

Digital attacks and online harassment

27. Journalists and outlets have been targeted with online harassment campaigns, doxing, and distributed denial-of-service (DDoS) attacks. Women journalists and outlets covering human rights, environmental issues, politics, and women's rights are the main targets of such attacks.
28. In 2018 and 2020, following her reporting on WhatsApp messaging campaigns in the 2018 elections, Folha de S.Paulo journalist Patrícia Campos Mello was targeted with massive online harassment campaigns⁴⁶.
29. In September 2019, various Twitter accounts shared personal details of two AzMina reporters, and the outlet's website was briefly knocked offline following publication of an article on legal provisions and safe methods for obtaining an abortion⁴⁷.
30. In 2020, accounts shared personal information about journalist Vera Magalhães and photographer Gabriela Biló on Twitter⁴⁸.
31. Between 2018 and 2021, several sports journalists in Minas Gerais suffered harassment and had personal information shared on social media in retaliation for their work, according to the state journalists' union⁴⁹.

32. Women journalists covering sports have documented systematic harassment and sexualized physical abuse while reporting; in response, 2018 saw the launch of a campaign demanding respect for women sports reporters⁵⁰.
33. In January 2021, investigative reporting and human rights organization Repórter Brasil experienced a DDoS attack⁵¹. In April, Portal Catarinas, an outlet specializing in gender, feminism, and human rights, was targeted with a similar attack⁵².

Law enforcement and judicial harassment

34. Photojournalists, especially those covering demonstrations, often experience harassment from law enforcement. In 2017, São Paulo state police arrested two photojournalists who were photographing a burning barricade and accused them of starting the fire⁵³. In 2020, military police detained freelance photojournalist Rodrigo Zaim for five hours while he was covering protests in São Paulo⁵⁴.
35. The legal system is another venue for censorship and intimidation. Journalists and outlets face criminal complaints, police investigations, and civil and criminal lawsuits aimed at removing content, blocking publication of reports, and silencing investigative reporters.
 - 2017: A judge ordered national newspapers Folha de S.Paulo and O Globo to remove stories from their websites about a hacker convicted of attempting to blackmail then First Lady Marcela Temer⁵⁵.
 - 2019: Supreme Court Judge Alexandre de Moraes ordered online magazine Crusoé to take down a report mentioning the court's president⁵⁶.
 - From June-November 2020, a Piauí state court placed journalist Arimateia Azevedo and outlet Portal AZ under a gag order, prohibiting Portal AZ from publishing anything "offensive" about the police unit

- 2020: A judge in Santa Catarina ordered websites The Intercept Brasil and ND+ and freelance journalist Schirlei Alves to “rectify” reporting on a rape trial, instructing them to add specific wording to their reporting⁵⁸.
 - 2021: Courts in Rio Grande do Sul blocked RBS reporting on corruption allegations involving a local mayor⁵⁹. The report was published in January 2022, after Brazil’s Supreme Court overturned the previous decisions.
36. The increase in civil suits seeking to remove published content is deeply concerning. In 2020, Abraji identified more than 200 lawsuits brought by local officials requesting removal of journalistic content⁶⁰.
37. Court-imposed gag orders and secret judicial proceedings have occasionally prevented outlets from reporting on the very investigations and processes carried out against them.
38. CPJ has found that criminal slander and defamation laws remain an instrument to pressure journalists⁶¹. Authorities at all levels, from state police to government ministers, have opened criminal investigations and filed criminal complaints against journalists and media outlets, including:
- 2019: Damares Alves, Brazil’s minister for women, family, and human rights, filed a complaint with the São Paulo Public Prosecutor’s Office against online magazine AzMina after it published an article about access to safe abortion methods⁶².
 - 2020
 - Alleging a violation of the National Security Law, then Minister of Justice André Mendonça requested federal law enforcement agencies investigate journalist Helio Schwartzman over a column he wrote⁶³. Mendonça also requested an investigation into cartoonist Renato Aroeira for publishing a cartoon and journalist Ricardo Noblat for reposting it on Twitter.

- 2021: Rio de Janeiro Civil Police opened a criminal slander investigation into The Intercept Brasil executive editor Leandro Demori after he reported on police killings⁶⁵.
 - 2022: The Minas Gerais state Attorney General filed a criminal slander and defamation complaint against UOL journalist Thiago Herdy⁶⁶.
39. In August 2019, a Rondônia court sentenced two journalists to four months in prison and a fine for defamation⁶⁷.
40. In 2018, sports blogger Paulo Cezar Andrade Prado served one month and 23 days in prison in São Paulo state following a defamation conviction. In September 2021, Prado was arrested again after being sentenced to five months in prison in another defamation case⁶⁸.

COVID-19 and press freedom

41. The Brazilian government's response to the COVID-19 pandemic created additional challenges for the press⁶⁹.
42. In March 2020, President Jair Bolsonaro signed Provisional Measure 928⁷⁰, which suspended deadlines for public entities to respond to freedom of information requests, and forbade appeals of denied requests.
43. In 2020, Rio de Janeiro Mayor Marcelo Crivella's office used public funds to pay municipal employees to obstruct journalists at hospitals and block news crews from covering the pandemic⁷¹.

publish data on vaccinations and the pandemic⁷³, and denouncing what they called a “data blackout.” Brazil’s health minister has also limited media participation in several press conferences⁷⁴.

45. Journalists covering the pandemic have been harassed and assaulted. In November 2020, several people threatened two NSC TV employees reporting on lockdown measures in Florianópolis⁷⁵.

Anti-press rhetoric, harassment and access denied by authorities

46. Authorities and public officials have denied access to journalists and frequently utilized anti-press rhetoric to insult, threaten, and discredit reporters and media outlets.
47. Throughout his 2018 campaign and as president, Jair Bolsonaro has systematically attempted to undermine individual journalists and the press in general, contributing to an environment that condones attacks against journalists⁷⁶.
48. There is a gender element to this rhetoric, as President Bolsonaro has responded especially aggressively to questions from women⁷⁷. The president and his son, Congressman Eduardo Bolsonaro, made offensive comments about journalist Patrícia Campos Mello that contributed to the harassment campaign targeting her in 2020. Campos Mello later successfully sued both for moral damages⁷⁸.
49. In a 2019 video, Bolsonaro threatened to revoke Globo’s broadcasting license and accused media outlets of trying to undermine his government⁷⁹.
50. Other authorities, including ministers and members of Congress, have followed the president’s lead and engaged in similar anti-press behavior⁸⁰.
51. In 2021, President Bolsonaro’s personal lawyer Frederick Wassef sent a threatening text message to UOL journalist Juliana Dal Piva after she reported on alleged corruption involving the president’s family⁸¹.

52. In 2019, Rio de Janeiro city officials blocked journalists from three Grupo Globo outlets from covering a press conference by the health minister and Rio's mayor⁸².
53. In 2020, several outlets suspended coverage from outside the presidential palace, citing security concerns⁸³.
54. Public officials have used videos to harass journalists, including a video by Rio de Janeiro Military Police insulting journalist Rafael Soares in December 2020⁸⁴, and one by municipal officials in Rio Grande do Sul claiming to reveal identifying information about investigative reporter Giovani Grizotti in January 2022⁸⁵.

Recommendations to the government of Brazil

55. Ensure prompt, thorough investigations into killings of journalists and that all perpetrators, including masterminds, face justice in a timely manner.
56. Investigate threats and attacks against journalists in a timely, effective manner.
57. Establish an effective mechanism to protect at-risk journalists that is tailored to address the needs of journalists, with necessary budget and staffing allocations for its full implementation.
58. Stop utilizing criminal slander and defamation charges to prosecute journalists and media outlets, and refrain from using civil cases to impose punitive measures that restrict press freedom, including gag orders and content removal.
59. Undertake necessary reforms to Brazil's penal code to exclude Articles 138-140, decriminalizing slander, defamation, and injury ("crimes against honor").
60. Ensure that any new legislation approved is in line with Article 5 of Brazil's Constitution and with its obligations under international human rights instruments.
61. Ensure a safe environment for journalists, refraining from speech that undermines the free press or encourages violence against journalists, and instead acknowledging the importance of independent media for democracy and human rights.
