

Global Initiative to End All Corporal Punishment of Children

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC
BRIEFING FOR THE HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL
UNIVERSAL PERIODIC REVIEW – 5th session, 2008

From Peter Newell, Coordinator, Global Initiative

Corporal punishment of children breaches their rights to respect for human dignity and physical integrity and to equal protection under the law. It is recognised by the Committee on the Rights of the Child and other treaty bodies, as well as by the UN Secretary General's Study on Violence against Children, as a highly significant issue, both for asserting children's status as rights holders and for the prevention of all forms of violence.

The Global Initiative to End All Corporal Punishment of Children (www.endcorporalpunishment.org) has been regularly briefing the Committee on the Rights of the Child on this issue since 2002, and since 2004 has similarly briefed the Committee Against Torture, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the Human Rights Committee. There is growing progress now across all regions in challenging this very common form of violence against children. But we are concerned that many States persist in ignoring treaty body recommendations to prohibit and eliminate all corporal punishment. We hope that the UPR Process will give particular attention to states' response, or lack of response, to the concluding observations from treaty bodies, on this and other key issues.

In June 2006, the Committee on the Rights of the Child adopted General Comment No. 8 on "The right of the child to protection from corporal punishment and other cruel or degrading forms of punishment", which emphasises the immediate obligation on states parties to prohibit all corporal punishment of children, including within the home. Other treaty bodies, and regional human rights mechanisms, have condemned all corporal punishment. In October 2006, the report of the UN Secretary General's Study on Violence against Children was submitted to the General Assembly. It recommends universal prohibition of all corporal punishment, setting a goal of 2009.

Summary

This briefing describes the legality of corporal punishment of children in the Central African Republic, despite the recommendations of the Committee on the Rights of the Child. We hope the Review will highlight with concern the Central African Republic's disregard for the Committee's recommendations, and strongly recommend that the government introduce legislation as a matter of urgency to prohibit corporal punishment of children in all settings, including the home.

1 Legality of corporal punishment in Central African Republic

1.1 Corporal punishment of children is lawful in the home under the concept of parental power in article 213 of the French Law. Laws against violence and abuse are not interpreted as prohibiting corporal punishment of children. In 1998, a draft Family and Persons Code (1997) was expected to include the right of a parent to reprimand and chastise the child but we have no up to date information.

1.2 Corporal punishment is lawful in schools and in alternative care settings.

1.3 We have been unable to ascertain the legality of corporal punishment in the penal system, as a sentence for crime and as a disciplinary measure in penal institutions.

2 Recommendations by human rights treaty monitoring bodies

2.1 In 2000, following examination of the state party's initial report, the Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern at corporal punishment of children and recommended that the State party "end all acts of violence against children, including corporal punishment" (CRC/C/15/Add.138, para. 45).
