Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its sixteenth session from 22 April to 3 May 2013. The review of Cape Verde was held at the third meeting on 23 April 2013. The delegation of Cape Verde was headed by José Carlos Lopes Correia, Minister of Justice. At its 10th meeting held on 26 April 2013, the Working Group adopted the report on Cape Verde.

2. On 14 January 2013, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Cape Verde: Burkina Faso, Kazakhstan and Guatemala.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Cape Verde:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/16/CPV/1 and Corr.1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/16/CPV/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/16/CPV/3 and Corr.1).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Mexico, Montenegro, the Netherlands, Slovenia, Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Cape Verde through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review (UPR).

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation headed by José Carlos Lopes Correia, Minister of Justice, noted that appreciation and respect for human rights was a part of the sociocultural heritage of Cape Verdean people and that the Constitution recognized, among others, the inviolability and inalienability of human rights as the basis of all human communities and of peace and justice.

6. Cape Verde noted that the Constitution recognized an extensive list of rights, liberties and guarantees and civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights. It was highlighted that the Constitution also established that, following their entry into force, ratified standards and principles of general international law or common law and of international treaty law took precedence over domestic laws and regulations.

7. Cape Verde underscored that it had ratified eight of the nine basic United Nations human rights treaties and that, in addition to these conventions, it had ratified and/or acceded to five of the eight optional protocols thereto. Additionally, Cape Verde was party to the principal African human rights protection instruments.

8. Cape Verde then provided information on key areas with regard to the recommendations made during the first review of Cape Verde. On the national human rights protection system, it was noted that in 1999 the Constitution had established the ombudsman (Provedor de Justiça) as an independent organ, elected by Parliament and with powers to receive complaints regarding action or inaction of public officials, and make recommendations. In 2003 the ombudsman's Statute had been approved by law.

9. Cape Verde recalled that to promote the incorporation of human rights into the social fabric, the National Human Rights Committee (CNDH) had been established in 2001 and that in 2004 it had evolved into the National Commission for Human Rights and Citizenship (CNDHC). In follow-up to the recommendation received in 2008, a study had been carried out with a view to preparing a draft of the new Statute of CNDHC which would be in full compliance with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (Paris Principles). Draft legislation to approve the new Statute would be presented to Parliament.

10. With regard to technical cooperation, Cape Verde noted the Government's continuous cooperation with international and regional human rights mechanisms highlighting a number of recent training events it had participated in, concerning, inter alia, the ratification of international instruments and national human rights institutions. It was stressed that such action had been carried out with the objective of realizing, as determined in resolution 9/12 of the Human Rights Council and with international assistance, a plan for its fulfilment of its international obligations, particularly with regard to preparation of the various reports under the conventions that it had ratified.

11. With regard to the relative delay in submission of reports to treaty bodies, Cape Verde explained that it had already submitted reports under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD) and the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). Its first reports under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR) and the seventh and eight CEDAW reports are in translation and should be transmitted soon. It was added that a mechanism, involving all entities implicated in the framework of the international instruments ratified by Cape Verde, to work on ensuring the regular presentation of reports, will be created soon.

12. Cape Verde then provided information on ratification of international conventions.

13. With regard to the recommendation to ratify the Convention against Discrimination in Education, Cape Verde stated that, although the process for its ratification had not yet been concluded, its legislative framework incorporated, to a large extent, the legal regime therein enshrined and referred to the Constitution and the Framework Act on the Education System. It noted particularly that compliance with the principle of non-discrimination in education was evident as equal access to all education levels was a reality in the country. Cape Verde then referred to statistical information in that regard.

14. Cape Verde also noted that though it had not ratified the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, ratification should take place in the first half of 2013 in view of the clear political will of both the Government and Parliament.

15. Additionally, Cape Verde informed the Human Rights Council that the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (OP-CEDAW) had been ratified in 2011 and had entered into force in 2012.

16. Cape Verde then recalled that it had signed the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance (CPED) in 2007 and that it expected to ratify that instrument during the first half of 2013. Ratification would require the adoption of legislative measures and, in particular, amending the Penal Code to criminalize enforced disappearance.

17. It added further that the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) had been ratified in February of 2011.

18. Ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (OP-CAT) should take place during the first quarter of 2013.

19. Cape Verde indicated that it had ratified the Rome Statute in 2011 and become party in January 2012. The Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the International Criminal Court is currently under review by the Government.

20. Regarding the issue of respect and protection of children's rights, Cape Verde noted that had ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) and its Optional Protocols; the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child; the International Labour Organization (ILO) Conventions No. 182 (1999) concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour and No. 138 (1973) concerning Minimum Age for Admission to Employment; and the Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in Respect of Intercountry Adoption.

21. It noted that in order to give effect to the constitutional principles concerning the rights of the child, legislative measures had been taken and highlighted the Statute on Children and Adolescents, which was currently in the final stage of discussion before approval and should replace existing legislation.

22. It was added that support centres for child victims of ill-treatment, abuse and sexual abuse had been created and were functioning. Protection of the rights of the child was ensured through municipal protection committees that were coordinated by the Institute for the Child and Adolescent and its local branches.

23. Cape Verde then provided statistics concerning children's rights noting, among others, the decrease in the child mortality rate from 0 to 5 years from 31.9 per 1,000 in 2000 to 23.7 per 1,000 in 2009. It also noted that chronic malnutrition rate for children under 5 had fallen from 16 per cent in 1994 to 9.7 per cent in 2009. It was highlighted that 90 per cent of children aged 6–17 attended school during the 2009/10 academic year. A social support service provided a hot meal for each child in basic school every day, which had contributed to a decrease in absenteeism and school failure.

24. Cape Verde then provided information regarding the administration of justice and the prison system. It was noted that significant legislation had been adopted over the past few years resulting in increasing the autonomy and independence of the courts and the judiciary and details regarding this legislation was provided. Cape Verde referred to the existence of a number of basic guarantees such as the inalienable right to a hearing of those accused; the right to be represented by counsel when appearing before police or judicial authority; and the provision of legal assistance to those without means. It was also noted that the Government had created alternative conflict resolution mechanisms. Cape Verde then provided information on conditions for arrest and detention by police, rights of detainees and existing guarantees for a fair trial.

25. With regard to the prison system, Cape Verde explained that there were currently two prisons at the national level and that an additional facility is in the final stages of construction on the island of Sal. In late 2010, the total population was 1,226 detainees: 1,153 men and 73 women.

26. In addition to legislation that defined the general rules for the enforcement of custodial sentences, in 2009 the internal regulations of the Central Prison of Praia were approved, which were also provisionally being applied to other civil prison establishments. The regulations fully incorporate the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.

27. It was added that particular attention is given to detainees aged 16–21 who, in addition to being separated from other detainees, were also provided with personalized assistance, participated in group work with technicians and benefited from particular attention to favour their chances of social reintegration.

28. Cape Verde explained that preliminary draft legislation on the enforcement of custodial and other sentences was currently being prepared with a view to amending current legislation. The preliminary draft would strengthen the existing rights of detainees and create new obligations for prisons by requiring additional measures to ensure that the enforcement of sentences and security measures focuses more closely on the of detainees.

29. Cape Verde then provided information on various issues related to sentencing and prisons including: rights to exercise of religious activities and the rights of and services available to detainees relative to health care, hygiene, job training or alphabetization and retraining courses made available for prisoners with a view to their reintegration. It was highlighted that, in addition to family visits to prisons visits by outside observers, such as NGOs or religious entities and the press are permitted.

30. Action taken to ensure the respect for gender equality, protection of rights and elimination of gender-based violence was then described.

31. It was noted that one of the first initiatives by Cape Verde as an independent State was the signing and ratification of CEDAW without reservations. Successive Governments had endeavoured to ensure the full implementation of public policies for the promotion of gender equality. Cape Verde considered that the results had been very positive. It highlighted, among other advances, that that the proportion of women in the executive branch had increased from 0 in 1975 to 60 per cent in 2008, the proportion of women in Parliament increased from 1 per cent in 1975 to 18 per cent in 2006, and that net enrolment rate of girls in secondary education had progressed from 18.3 per cent in 1975 to 64 per cent in 2007.

32. It referred to the existence of various institutions and actions adopted in support of the rights of women and women's issues including: the development of the national plan for combating gender-based violence and the inter-agency support network for victims of domestic violence; the Programme of Action for the Promotion of Gender Equality (2011–2012); and the action of Cape Verdean Association of Women Jurists.

33. It was also recalled that, in 1979, Cape Verde had ratified International Labour Organization Equal Remuneration Convention No. 100 (1951) and Convention No. 111 (1958) concerning Discrimination in Respect of Employment and Occupation, which incorporated into domestic law the general principles of equal remuneration for men and women and non-discrimination in employment on the basis of sex. It then referred to various provisions in the Constitution and legislation to ensure freedom from discrimination, equal treatment and protection for women.

34. Regarding gender-based violence, Cape Verde indicated that the Gender-Based Violence Act focused on three primary objectives: providing greater protection to victims, increasing the penalties for perpetrators and raising public awareness. The Act called for the establishment of a network of civil society organizations, the Sol (Sun) network which ensured coordination between NGOs, the national police, health centres, hospitals and community law centres, had been established in five municipalities on five of the country's nine islands and received 3,203 complaints of gender-based violence in 2010. The Sol network was an innovative approach inspired by the good practices of in other countries with wide experience in that field.

35. Cape Verde indicated that major challenges persisted, particularly the elimination of sexist stereotypes that led to discrimination against women in the public and private sphere.

36. With regard to respect for and protection of the rights of vulnerable groups, Cape Verde stated that the social sector and social policies had always been key to the choices made by successive Governments in Cape Verde. That reflected a vision of development that was people-centred and sought to ensure respect for the human rights of the entire population, and particularly the most vulnerable groups.

37. In order to supplement its social policies to combat poverty, in particular in the rural area, the State currently provided, to a group representing about 4.7 per cent of the population, and which included the elderly and vulnerable or disabled children and adults, with a minimum non-contributory pension.

38. Cape Verde noted that the Constitution required that public authorities ensured the special protection of persons with disabilities, which was further reflected in a law adopted in 2000. It indicated that the National Council on Disability, an advisory body, worked in partnership with the Government to propose, coordinate and monitor the implementation of national policies. The Government encouraged businesses to hire persons with disabilities by providing tax incentives.

39. It noted, however, that, despite the measures taken, persons with disabilities continued to face obstacles in their daily lives, such as gaining access to public buildings, and that the public authorities therefore promoted and encouraged associations of persons with disabilities.

40. It was indicated that women heads of household, especially in rural areas, was a group the deserved support, particularly in the area of microcredit, promoted by a 2007 law aiming to ensure they could support themselves and continue to maintain their businesses. It noted particularly the work of the Association in Support of Women's Self-Promotion in Development (MORABI).

41. Cape Verde then noted that the Constitution established that public officials must provide older persons with special protection. It added that the National Strategy for Older Persons had been adopted in 2011 and was guided by the principles of respect for the individual, integration, solidarity, sustainability, accessibility, participation, cooperation and partnership.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

42. During the interactive dialogue, 60 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue can be found in chapter II of the present report.

It raised concerns about cases of mistreatment of women and children as well as persons with disabilities requesting information on measures to protect them. It recognized efforts to strengthen the judicial system, but expressed concern about prison conditions. Germany made recommendations.

61. Ghana commended Cape Verde for efforts made in face of challenging resource constraints. It welcomed efforts in education while expressing concern about the high dropout rate in secondary education and urged steps to be taken to address root causes. It raised concerns about treatment of migrants, refugees and asylum seekers. It supported the call to the international community for assistance. Ghana made recommendations.

62. Iceland welcomed the increase in women's participation in the public sector, requesting information on measures to increase such participation in the private sector. It noted improved protection for children and asked about measures to criminalize corporal punishment and combat sexual abuse of children. Iceland expressed concern over human trafficking and requested information on measures to combat such practices. Iceland commended efforts to eliminate illiteracy.

63. Indonesia welcomed the work by the National Human Rights Committee. It commended the continued commitment on social policies and noted positive measures for vulnerable groups. It commended the minimum non-contributory pension. It expressed hope for continued progress in facing human rights challenges. Indonesia made recommendations.

64. Italy noted the need to strengthen the rights of vulnerable groups. It asked about how Cape Verde intended to improve mechanisms for early detection of sexual abuse of children, and measures envisaged to address root causes of minor delinquency and improve the legal framework in that area. Italy made recommendations.

65. Luxembourg noted that Cape Verde was one of few countries in the region that should achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) by 2015 and commended ratification of human rights instruments. It raised concerns over sexist and patriarchal attitudes and persistence of domestic and sexual violence against women. It expressed concern about crime in cities, police brutality and prison conditions and inquired about measures to combat juvenile delinquency. Luxembourg made recommendations.

66. Malaysia noted significant progress and commended efforts in rights of the child, women and vulnerable groups. It appreciated implementation of the 50 accepted recommendations. It supported request for funding. It acknowledged challenges faced and expressed confidence they would be addressed. Malaysia made recommendations.

67. Maldives commended progress in women's participation in decision-making but noted continued stereotyping and violence against women, child labor and abuse. It recognized the need for technical assistance and financial support. It noted that no standing invitation had been issued to human rights special procedure mandate holders and asked for information in that regard. It made recommendations.

68. Mali commended the ratification and implementation in domestic legislation of several human rights instruments. It noted efforts in protecting children's rights and the creation of the Institute for Children and Adolescents to combat violence against children. It commended reforms in the justice sector. It expressed confidence in continued action.

69. Mauritania noted the progress made in implementing the 50 recommendations from the first cycle and the ratification of several human rights instruments. However, it underscored the need for institutional reforms, calling on the international community and United Nations bodies to provide support for implementation of policy to promote and respect human rights.

70. Mexico welcomed ratification of human rights instruments, expressing hope for further ratifications of pending instruments. It noted legislative measures to improve the rights of the child and prison conditions. It recognized efforts to promote gender equality and overcome sexist stereotypes. Mexico made recommendations.

71. Montenegro commended strengthened institutions achieved between the two UPR cycles and progress reflected in the upgrade from the group of least developed countries to lower middle income status. It welcomed broad engagement by the Government with all segments of society in the process of the preparation of the national report. It made recommendations.

72. Morocco welcomed the key role played by the National Commission for Human Rights and Citizenship. It supported educational reform aimed at mandatory universal education through to the tenth year of schooling and noted progress in attendance by girls. It welcomed the work of the Institute for Children and Adolescents and noted high participation by women in the judicial sector. It supported the request for technical cooperation.

73. The Netherlands commended efforts to improve the national human rights situation and the ratification of CRPD and the signing of OP-CAT. It expressed concern at slow progress made in eradicating child labour. It made a recommendation.

74. Nicaragua highlighted the ratification of important international human rights instruments, the adoption of new legislative measures and the creation of new public structures to cater for citizens' needs. It applauded efforts towards gender equality and promoting the participation of women in public administration. Nicaragua made recommendations.

75. Niger noted with satisfaction efforts made to ratify almost all of the regional and international human rights instruments, and incorporate them into domestic legislation. It encouraged the international community to support those efforts. Niger made a recommendation.

76. Nigeria commended Cape Verde on its efforts in preparing the UPR report and on progress made in promoting and protecting human rights in the country. Nigeria made recommendations.

77. Philippines welcomed the ratification of several international and regional human rights instruments and their incorporation into domestic legislation. It noted a drop in mortality and chronic malnutrition rates for the under-5s and efforts to ensure 90 per cent school attendance by children aged 7–17 years. It made recommendations.

78. Portugal recognized significant progress made in the promotion and protection of women's rights asking about additional measures the Government would adopt to combat persistent domestic violence. It also requested more information on measures envisaged to provide support for children with cerebral palsy. Portugal made recommendations.

79. Rwanda welcomed the establishment of an independent human rights institution and the preparation of new draft statutes in accordance with the Paris Principles, which it hoped would come into force following the creation of the Office of the Ombudsman. It also welcomed the ratification of regional and international instruments. Rwanda made recommendations.

80. Senegal highlighted steps taken to promote and protect human rights and encouraged it to continue consultations on creating an Ombudsman to strengthen those efforts. It welcomed efforts to protect vulnerable persons, particularly children and women. Senegal made recommendations.

81. Cape Verde replied to advance questions and additional issues raised during the interactive dialogue. It was stressed that the country had made great efforts to ensure that education without discrimination was accessible to all, that access to health was made available to the population, including those living in both urban and rural areas, and to suppress violence against detainees, children, women and the elderly in the home. Therefore, Cape Verde had welcomed the presence of and being in contact with international organizations, such as OHCHR, to help monitor the implementation of its obligations under the relevant international human rights instruments.

82. With regard to questions on preventative detention, it was explained that, according to domestic legislation, that measure could only be applied under certain strict conditions, such as risk of absconding or reoffending, and for restricted periods defined by law. The Criminal Code of Procedure determined that preventative detention could not exceed four months without charges being brought. It was recalled that persons arrested by the police must be brought before a judge within 48 hours who would determine if the person should be detained while awaiting trial. Additionally, persons in preventative detention were brought before a judge every three months to re-evaluate the necessity of maintaining the detainee. Cape Verde recognized that there were often delays in criminal procedures, but highlighted that efforts were being made to bring its practice into line with international standards.

83. Cape Verde shared concerns expressed regarding human rights training of prison officials to ensure that prisons complied with their basic function, which was, according to the country's laws and the Constitution, the social reintegration of offenders. In that sense, prison officials were also agents for offenders' social reintegration. Cape Verde had attributed budgetary resources to ensuring the training of prison officials not only with regard to aspects relating to maintaining security but also in human relations, reintegration and human rights. It was highlighted that two training sessions had already been carried out in 2013 and details provided in that regard.

84. On results achieved in combating sexist stereotypes and patriarchal attitudes, Cape Verde highlighted that its legislation was very modern and in line with international standards, but that traditional mentalities could not be abolished by decree. That was why institutions such as the National Human Rights Commission were created to raise awareness on human rights and educate the population. In the previous few years, the Commission had been working intensively to carry out that function. Additionally, the educational system of Cape Verde was conceived so as to raise awareness of human rights issues. Action adopted in that regard was described in detail.

85. As for the reduction of discrimination in the private sector it was clarified that labour law already prohibited discrimination, so that there was a clear norm that should be complied with by that sector.

86. With regard to questions on the establishment of the National Human Rights Commission and persons with disabilities, Cape Verde acknowledged existing challenges and reiterated information provided on action taken to address those issues.

87. On plans to reduce gender-based violence, it was explained that the new legislation adopted was appropriate and complied with international standards, but that remaining challenges included awareness-raising and training of police and judicial officials with regard to how to address the issue expeditiously, as well as that of the general population.

88. Sierra Leone congratulated Cape Verde on its achievements in promoting and protecting human rights since 2008, including legislative and policy measures in the areas of women's and children's rights, gender equality and combating gender-based violence, the rights of persons with disabilities and prison reform. It made recommendations.

89. Singapore welcomed the provision of free primary education, the adoption of legislation to enhance the legal protection of children in line with its obligations under CRC and the establishment of support centres for child victims of ill-treatment, abuse and sexual exploitation. It also welcomed initiatives to promote gender equality and combat gender-based violence referring to the 2011 Gender-Based Violence Act and the National Gender Equity and Equality Plan. Singapore made recommendations.

90. Slovakia commended the ratification and signature of major international human rights instruments, the drafting of a national UPR follow-up action plan adopted in 2012, the adoption of the Gender-Based Violence Act, constitutional reforms to strengthen the independence of the judiciary and greater female political participation. Slovakia made recommendations.

91. Slovenia noted with appreciation the ratification of several important international human rights instruments, including CRPD, OP-CEDAW, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide and the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. However, it was concerned that its reporting status was not very good. Slovenia made recommendations.

92. South Africa commended the signature and ratification of several key international human rights instruments and steps taken to promote and protect children's rights, including becoming a party to international and regional instruments and working in collaboration with UNICEF and the Institute for Children and Adolescents. It made a recommendation.

93. Spain congratulated Cape Verde on its ongoing commitment to the promotion and protection of human rights and commended in particular the adoption of legislation to eliminate discrimination against persons with disabilities and discrimination on grounds of gender or sexual orientation. Spain made recommendations.

94. Thailand commended steps taken to promote gender equality and strongly encouraged it to continue to adopt measures to eliminate gender-based violence, sexist stereotyping and domestic violence. It welcomed higher female school attendance and lower illiteracy rates. It expressed concern about the trafficking of women and girls. Thailand made recommendations.

95. Timor-Leste welcomed the ratification of OP-CEDAW, CRPD and the Rome Statute, justice reforms and the adoption of legislation to ensure the independence of the judiciary. It encouraged Cape Verde to adopt measures to ensure every child's right to education. It urged the international community to support the endeavours of Cape Verde.

96. Togo applauded the ratification of OP-CEDAW and CRPD, steps taken to implement gender-equality policies, particularly in health, education and politics, and legislative and regulatory measures adopted to protect children's rights. It encouraged continued efforts to protect and promote human rights, especially those of vulnerable groups. Togo made recommendations.

97. Tunisia welcomed the ratification of international and regional instruments and initiatives to strengthen the legal and institutional human rights framework. It encouraged Cape Verde to raise public awareness about gender equality and sexist stereotypes, and to explicitly prohibit corporal punishment at home and in childcare facilities. Tunisia made recommendations.

98. Turkey praised the pluralist democratic tradition in Cape Verde, which ensured free elections, and its position as one of the most advanced countries in West Africa in terms of human rights. It welcomed progress made in children's rights, especially measures adopted to ensure the right to education. Turkey made recommendations.

99. The United Kingdom welcomed the Government's continued commitment to human rights and urged it to implement its outstanding accepted UPR recommendations. It was encouraged by steps taken to ratify eight United Nations human rights treaties and five optional protocols and particularly welcomed the signing of OP-CAT. It made recommendations.

100. The United States of America was concerned that legislation did not prohibit all forms of trafficking, that Labour Code provisions failed to ensure the full application of equal pay for equal work, and that current sexual harassment legislation only recognized harassment by an employer, instructor or another superior, and no one else in the workplace. It made recommendations.

101. Uruguay welcomed the ratification of several core international human rights instruments, particularly OP-CEDAW, CRPD and the Rome Statute. It also welcomed progress made in reducing infant mortality, improving child nutrition, reforming justice and reducing illiteracy rates. Uruguay made recommendations.

102. Viet Nam noted that, despite being a developing archipelago country with scant natural resources, Cape Verde had achieved positive results, especially in gender equality and providing education for all. It applauded its willingness to cooperate at both regional and international levels on human rights issues. It made recommendations.

103. Algeria welcomed the ratification of CRPD and encouraged Cape Verde to focus its efforts on combating discrimination, human trafficking and violence against children. It praised its ranking as one of the world's 10 best ethical tourist destinations, given its respect for human rights, environmental protection and social welfare. Algeria made recommendations.

104. Angola welcomed progress made notably in the ratification of human rights instruments and policy reforms to promote and protect the rights of women, persons with disabilities, vulnerable groups and the elderly and to combat torture and gender violence. Angola encouraged Cape Verde to continue in its endeavours to further develop capacity in the promotion and protection of human rights and to call on OHCHR and the international community to support these.

105. Argentina congratulated Cape Verde on the ratification of the Rome Statute and on the adoption of the National Strategy for Older Persons. Argentina made recommendations.

106. Australia agreed that the mandate and functional capacity of the National Commission for Human Rights and Citizenship should be strengthened in compliance with the Paris Principles. It commended the constitutional review process, particularly progress made in gender equality. It encouraged full implementation of the updated National Action Plan to combat gender-based violence in 2013. Australia made a recommendation.

107. Belarus noted with satisfaction the range of international obligations undertaken by Cape Verde, the Government's determination to implement the recommendations of the first UPR cycle and update its legislation for the social protection of the population, and its progress in improving literacy levels. Belarus made recommendations.

108. Benin welcomed the ratification of several international and regional human rights instruments and steps taken to strengthen the national human rights system, including the development of a framework to facilitate cooperation with regional and national human rights mechanisms. It also welcomed efforts to promote gender equality, support domestic violence victims and create an Ombudsman.

109. Mozambique, noting that Cape Verde had ratified most of the African human rights legal instruments and the United Nations human rights treaties, highlighted its ongoing commitment to ensuring the full enjoyment of human rights, despite the impact of the international economic crisis. It encouraged its accession to the Convention against Discrimination in Education.

110. On the issue of the Ombudsman (Provedor), Cape Verde indicated that its creation was a priority and that high-level political action had been taken to ensure that it was achieved soon. With regard to abuse of young persons by police, it stated that the law criminalized torture and that in a number of cases investigations had been carried out and that both criminal and administrative procedures had been initiated. The State did not tolerate such situations.

111. On the issue of trafficking, it was recalled the Cape Verde had been party to the Palermo Protocol since 2004 and that the Criminal Code was currently being revised so that the crime of trafficking should be included as a result. Similarly, Cape Verde had made efforts to protect migrants and its national strategy on migration aimed at the integration of migrants in society. National NGOs had often provided support to migrants who arrived in the country. Some of those had returned but many, when conditions were met, were regularized.

112. Finally, it was highlighted that in Cape Verde children were protected from all types of sexual abuse both by civil and criminal law through the relevant provision of the Civil and Criminal Codes. That included cases of abuse in school settings, between students and teachers, which had at times been addressed in the courts. Regarding corporal punishment, Cape Verde recalled information provided and added that such situations had, in some cases, been addressed before the courts. Measures to raise awareness of the population had also been adopted.

113. In conclusion, Cape Verde reiterated its strong commitment to human rights. It indicated that, at the national level, the administration and society would need to develop further cooperation and partnership strategies in action taken to promote human rights. Cape Verde added that it would soon issue an open and standing invitation to all Human Rights Council special procedures. It stated that international cooperation, from other countries and partner organizations, including OHCHR, would be indispensable to ensure that that it could continue to plan and implement activities within the framework of the promotion and protection of human rights.

114. Cape Verde stated that it had made great efforts and achieved significant progress in the implementation of recommendations and the fulfilment of its international commitments. Though it wished to do more it was conscious that the country's resource constraints were, however, an obstacle to the implementation of human rights policies with financial implications. It thanked the international community for its cooperation with Cape Verde and stated that the action of the Human Rights Council and of the Working Group would continue to be an important incentive and support.
