Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review (UPR), established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its twentieth session from 27 October to 7 November 2014. The review of Fiji was held at the 5th meeting on 29 October 2014. The delegation of Fiji was headed by the Honourable Mr. Aiyaz Sayed-Khaiyum, Minister of Justice and Attorney-General. At its 10th meeting held on 31 October 2014, the Working Group adopted the report on Fiji.
2. On 15 January 2014, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Fiji: Japan, Namibia, the Russian Federation.
3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Fiji:
 - (a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/20/FJI/1);
 - (b) A compilation prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/20/FJI/2);
 - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/20/FJI/3).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Belgium, Germany, Liechtenstein, Mexico, Netherlands, Slovenia, Spain, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Fiji through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the UPR.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. Opening statements by the Fijian delegation were made by the Attorney-General and Minister for Justice, the Chief Justice, the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Chairman of the Media Industry Development Authority.
6. Fiji's commitment to advancing and protecting the fundamental principles and values of universal human rights enunciated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was articulated through the Constitution of 7 September 2013. This Constitution was the first Constitution in Fiji to eliminate the legal enforcement of ethnic voting, and it had unprecedented inclusion of social and economic rights in addition to political and civil rights, together creating a transformative human rights normative framework for the people of Fiji. The State through this Constitution was legally obligated to pursue the advancement, protection and promotion of these rights.
7. Fiji held elections under this Constitution on 17 September with an 84.6% participation rate of registered voters, and a record low 0.75% of invalid ballots. The elections were deemed credible, and reflective of the will of the Fijian people, in a preliminary statement of the Multinational Observer Group.
8. In addition to the human rights elaborated in the core international human rights instruments, Fiji urged the Human Rights Council to address emerging human rights issues including trans-border impacts of climate change, of asylum policies, and consequences of free trade agreements on socio-economic rights.

9. In response to questions from Belgium, Mexico and the United Kingdom on the ratification of international human rights instruments, Fiji confirmed that it was not a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, or the International Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. Nonetheless the Constitution's robust Bill of Rights went beyond obligations under the Covenants for all Fijians and placed an obligation on the State in securing and advancing those rights. Those rights were applied directly by the Fijian judiciary, and approval for the ratification of those international instruments would be the prerogative of Parliament.

10. Fiji remained open to inviting Special Rapporteurs. However, Fiji was operating in an entirely new political, social and legislative environment. Fiji wanted to be in a position where it could ratify those conventions and have the resources to host and meet the standards of the mandate holders before inviting them.

11. Women's rights in Fiji were consistent with the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) which Fiji ratified in 1995. In response to questions from 10 countries on steps taken to end discrimination and violence against women, Fiji acknowledged the challenges posed by these issues. New initiatives include updated provisions in the Crimes Decree for the offences of rape and sexual assault, the passing and application of the Domestic Violence Decree (DVD), judicial training, a new National Gender Policy, and gender training of the civil service. Fiji corrected the Netherlands' claim that the Constitution did not protect women by listing the newly protected grounds in addition to sex and gender, which were gender identity and expression, pregnancy and marital status, which constituted a broad protection of discrimination against women and allowed for the legal articulation of intersectional discrimination. It was also clarified that higher levels of reported cases of domestic violence raised as a concern in fact reflected higher reporting by victims as a result of the confidence in the above initiatives.

12. It was emphasized that these measures would only be meaningful if all stakeholders played their part in shaping society's attitudes towards zero tolerance. Training and participation by police, civil society, the judiciary and prosecutors was also required. It was important that civil society organizations familiarize themselves with these laws and initiatives, because they are empowered to represent women in the legal system under the DVD.

13. It was clarified that the DVD did not create an offence of domestic violence, and that the charge would remain one of assault under the Crimes Decree, but that there were important provisions in the DVD that can be used to protect women.

14. Responding to questions from Belgium and Estonia on the International Criminal Court (ICC), Fiji, as one of the first States to ratify the Rome Statute, remained steadfastly committed to the ICC. Fiji's domestic legislation was in full complementarity with the provisions of the Rome Statute and domestic legislation through the Crimes Decree.

15. Responding to Ethiopia and Switzerland on rights vis-a-vis limitations in the Fijian Constitution, Fiji explained that the burden was on the State to prove that the limitations were necessary and that the law must always promote the values that underlay a democratic society based on human dignity, equality and freedom. In addition, Section 7 of the Bill of Rights guided the Courts' interpretation, and allowed the Courts to consider international law in their decisions.

16. Responding to questions about the abolition of the death penalty by France, Germany and Namibia, Fiji advised that it had abolished the death penalty in 2001, but it remained indirectly in the Military Code by virtue of the applicability of the UK Army Act

1955. Fiji announced that in the next session of Parliament, the Military Code would be amended to remove the reference to the death penalty altogether.

17. Responding to questions and recommendations made by Germany, New Zealand and the Republic of Korea on human rights abuses, in particular alleged torture and ill-treatment by the police, Fiji explained that where complaints to the police had been made, and there had been sufficient evidence for prosecution as determined by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), such persons had been prosecuted and indeed some were currently serving terms of imprisonment for such acts.

18. Fiji's new legal framework under the Constitution would allow steps to be taken to ensure that police procedures were modernized and made more transparent. Acknowledging that torture during interrogation had been a longstanding problem in Fiji due to cultural misconceptions inherited from attitudes prevalent in Europe within living memory, and recognizing the need to avoid lengthy court proceedings to determine whether confessions and statements were obtained under such conditions, the judiciary had itself provided budgetary resources to initiate a project for the video interviewing of all suspects in custody, and would provide additional funds and training for the investigators. This was done in recognition that institutions must combine their resources to achieve the elimination of impropriety and violent treatment, and to ensure a more efficient justice system.

19. The Police too had acknowledged deficiencies in police investigations and aspects of Police culture that in the past had excused or ignored police brutality, and that training was needed in the areas of domestic violence and interrogations. Specialized organizations were invited to collaborate with relevant Fijian agencies in the provision of such training so as to improve the human rights standing of the criminal justice system in Fiji. In further response to concerns raised about assaults and brutality in police custody, it was explained that where evidence was obtained by means of assault by the police, the prosecution would not continue and the matter would be referred to the Commissioner of Police for investigation and possible criminal charges against the officers. Such processes had most recently resulted in the prosecution and conviction of 3 police officers who were convicted of murder by joint enterprise and 2 convicted of being accessories after the fact when a young man died in Police custody.

20. Fiji's criminal justice system was explained, with particular emphasis on the processes followed subsequent to the lodging of a criminal complaint until the decision on whether or not to proceed with the prosecution. It was emphasized that the Police were also independent of the Government and the DPP with regards to how the police investigations were conducted, and that the police could only act if a formal written complaint was made by a person, including if the complaint was one of unfair treatment by the police.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

21. During the interactive dialogue, 54 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

22. Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) commended efforts on social development, poverty reduction, the health service, decent housing and the risk of natural disasters. The National Policy on Persons Living with Disabilities and free primary and secondary education were noted. It made recommendations.

23. Algeria welcomed the Constitution establishing universal principles and the strengthened legal framework for human rights, particularly regarding elections and political participation. Policies addressing persons with disabilities and older persons, and efforts to address living standards were appreciated. Algeria made recommendations.

24. Argentina offered its congratulations on the introduction of the National Gender Policy promoting gender equality, social justice and sustainable development. Argentina referred to its work with France and other countries on an international campaign to encourage ratification of ICPED and made recommendations.
25. Australia welcomed the 2014 elections and provisional recognition of their credibility from the Multinational Observer Group. Australia noted the importance of supporting the democratic role of civil society and the media. Australia commended the ILO direct contacts mission and noted the continued need for close engagement with labour partners. Australia made recommendations.
26. Bangladesh noted progress despite the challenges faced and Fiji's vulnerability to natural disasters, highlighting the Constitution, improvements in women's and children's health and resources for education. Women's involvement in public life and decision-making and gender-based violence were reported areas of concern. Bangladesh made recommendations.
27. Belgium welcomed electoral legislation and the lifting of Public Emergency Regulations, despite ongoing human rights challenges. The National Gender Policy was noted, although gender-based violence was prevalent, and the importance of freedom of expression and assembly were emphasized. Belgium made recommendations.
28. Brazil commended Fiji on the successful general elections and the appointment of women to ministerial and assistant ministerial positions. It was concerned about restrictions on freedom of opinion and expression and the percentage of the population living below the poverty line. Brazil made recommendations.
29. Canada asked what steps were being taken to ensure full protection of the rights to freedom of expression, opinion, association and assembly. It welcomed the news that women accounted for 16 per cent of the new Parliament and the election of a female Speaker. It made recommendations.
30. Chile encouraged action to ensure the independence of the judiciary, to restrict the scope of emergency legislation, to guarantee freedom of expression, and to compensate victims of human rights violations. It made recommendations.
31. China commended Fiji's commitment to gender equality and social justice, the National Policy for Persons living with Disabilities and the National Council for Older Persons. It also commended the increase in investment aimed at guaranteeing free primary and secondary education. It made a recommendation.
32. Costa Rica encouraged speedier action to ratify core human rights instruments and urged Fiji to continue cooperating with treaty bodies and special procedures. It welcomed the steps that were being taken to remove the death penalty from all legal instruments. It made recommendations.
33. Cuba commended the steps being taken by Fiji to meet the needs of persons with disabilities and to ensure access to free primary and secondary education. Cuba urged the international community to support national efforts for issues identified as priorities. It made a recommendation.
34. Denmark welcomed the new Government's undertaking to ratify all core human rights instruments. Noting that steps to ratify CAT were already underway, it encouraged the Government to seek the assistance of the Convention against Torture Initiative. Denmark made recommendations.
35. Estonia noted that the drafting of the Constitution had not been all-inclusive. It urged Fiji to abolish decrees restricting media freedom, to end the intimidation and harassment of persons criticizing the State, and to ensure zero tolerance of violence against women. It made recommendations.

36. Ethiopia enquired about the impact of legal restrictions applicable to certain constitutional rights on individuals' enjoyment of the rights concerned. It noted the existence of restrictions on the capacity of law enforcement organs to interpret the country's human rights obligations. It made a recommendation.

37. France welcomed the restoration of parliamentary democracy and the adoption of the new Constitution, which had put an end to major discrimination on ethnic grounds. France made recommendations.

38. Germany welcomed the Bill of Rights contained in the new Constitution. It commended the abolitionist approach taken towards the death penalty for over two decades. Germany made recommendations.

39. Responding to questions on Fiji's Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission, Fiji advised that the Commission would now serve as the predominant enforcement body for the Bill of Rights guaranteed under the Constitution. The Constitution provided for the independence of the Commission in its functions and in the exercise of its authority and powers, including administrative autonomy and control over its own budget and finances. To fulfil its mandate, which included the enforcement and monitoring the compliance of human rights instruments ratified by the Government including by bringing proceedings before the Courts, Parliament must provide adequate funding and resources for the Commission. OHCHR and development partners were invited to work with Government to facilitate capacity of the Commission and ensure compliance with the Paris principles.

40. The Fijian delegation explained the meritocracy approach to the Fijian public service, having done away with discriminatory policies that further advanced an elite agenda and clique rather than addressing the inequalities they claimed to address.

41. The Chief Justice, speaking on matters and questions pertaining to the judiciary, refuted any insinuations that the Fijian judiciary was not independent and that it was subject to the direction and control of the government. The appointment of judicial officers was done through the Judicial Services Commission (JSC), and consultation with, not concurrence or approval, of the Attorney-General, was required. In the case of any disagreement, it would ultimately be the JSC's final decision. Commentary that the government controls the judiciary was therefore erroneous. Representation on the JSC of Members and non-Members of the Bar, and video recording of the proceedings, were a noticeable improvement from those of the 1997 Constitution and had considerably less subject to political influence and control in the appointment process. Furthermore, Section 97 of the Constitution prescribed the independence and autonomy of the judiciary, new protections introduced in the 2013 Constitution.

42. The only two judicial appointments controlled by the government of the day were those of the Chief Justice and the President of the Court of Appeal, under procedures that were the same as the 1997 Constitution, and similar to other jurisdictions. These arrangements under the current Constitution for judicial appointments were a noticeable improvement from previous Constitutions.

43. The only effective interference in Fijian judiciary had been the travel bans placed by Australia and New Zealand on members of the Judiciary appointed after 2009, as they deterred suitably qualified persons who might have served on the judicial bench. Sri Lankan assistance in allowing the secondment of its judiciary to Fiji was what enabled the judiciary in Fiji to continue to function effectively.

44. Consequently, and in response to questions, it was confirmed that Section 97 of the Fijian Constitution brought Fiji's judiciary into compliance with the UN Basic Principles on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers.
45. Also with regard to the effective functioning of the judiciary, the Chief Justice elaborated on the substantial training programme in place for the judiciary to be fully cognizant of human rights issues including awareness and sensitivity to gender issues and children in the court. Training input and assistance from specialist NGOs would be welcomed. However, the judiciary could not discuss individual cases with NGOs, and such approaches or letters were better addressed to the DPP seeking intervention with a view to appeal.
46. Other advancements in the judicial sector included that all sittings, except for the taking of children's evidence, matters involving trade secrets, copyright or national security, were conducted in open court, and that video recording of all court proceedings was soon to commence. To improve access to justice, and in line with the bill of rights in the Constitution, new lifts for the disabled, a crèche, and a room for vulnerable witnesses had been added.
47. Referring to questions raised on ouster clauses, the Chief Justice had directed that in all cases where the applicability of ouster clauses was challenged, such cases could not be rejected by registry staff upon initial filing, and must be listed before a judge for his/her ruling on that jurisdictional matter. Discussions would be ongoing with organisations such as the ILO who were to be welcomed in offering training sessions for judges and lawyers in relevant areas.
48. Ghana welcomed the entry into force of the new Constitution, which took into account the rights of children and of persons with disabilities. Ghana made recommendations.
49. India commended the holding of democratic elections, the adoption of the Constitution, the commitment to ratify core human rights treaties, the resource allocation in support of access to justice, the HIV/AIDS Decree, the National Policy on Persons Living with Disabilities and the National Gender Policy. India made recommendations.
50. Indonesia welcomed the results of the elections, in which Fijians had freely exercised their right to vote. It recalled the 10 years' timeframe set by the Government to ratify the core human rights treaties. It commended efforts to combat discrimination against women, particularly through the National Gender Policy. Indonesia made recommendations.
51. Ireland urged Fiji to cooperate fully with special procedures. It expressed concern about restrictions on freedom of expression under the Constitution and the Media Decree and the impact of the Public Order Amendment Decree on the exercise of freedom of peaceful assembly. Ireland made recommendations.
52. Israel commended the holding of free and fair elections and the adoption of the Constitution, which enshrined non-negotiable principles and values such as a common and equal citizenry, a secular State and social justice. It asked whether concrete measures were being taken to maintain a judiciary that was independent of the Government and the military. Israel made a recommendation.
53. Italy appreciated the Government's commitment to ratify the outstanding human rights instruments within ten years. It welcomed the steps taken to strengthen women's rights and commended the ratification of CEDAW and the adoption of the National Gender Policy. It encouraged the authorities to combat stereotypical attitudes to women and violence against women. Italy made recommendations.

54. Japan expressed concern about the broad grounds under the Constitution for restrictions on freedom of expression, opinion, association and assembly. It encouraged Fiji to further promote women's status and increase their participation in decision-making processes. Japan made recommendations.

55. Kenya enquired about progress in ratifying core human rights instruments. It noted that the 2009 Human Rights Commission Decree affected the Commission's independence and functionality. Kenya made recommendations.

56. Kuwait commended Fiji's commitment to ratify all core human rights treaties and the steps taken to enhance and implement the Strategic Development Plan. Kuwait made a recommendation.

57. Lebanon welcomed the steps taken to safeguard political, social, economic and cultural freedoms and freedom of the media, thereby consolidating democracy and equal rights. It commended in particular the adoption of the Constitution and the holding of general elections. Lebanon made recommendations.

58. Malaysia appreciated the implementation of various policies and plans, as recommended during the first review. Positive updates in education, ICT, housing, women's empowerment and children's rights were welcomed, alongside the Constitution and free elections. Engagement with the international community was noted. Malaysia made recommendations.

59. Maldives welcomed the Constitution and congratulated the Government on successful elections and its commitment to democratic consolidation and the rule of law. It also welcomed its efforts to reduce carbon emissions and mitigate and adapt to climate change. Maldives made a recommendation.

60. Montenegro asked about progress towards ratification of core human rights treaties, implementation of the National Gender Policy, measures to ensure gender equality in law and practice, and discussions on removing the death penalty from the Military Code. Montenegro made recommendations.

61. Morocco welcomed the holding of elections, implementation of the Roadmap for Democracy, which targeted revitalization of the national economy and putting an end to ethnic discrimination, and the progressive Constitution. It asked for an update on the implementation of the Domestic Violence Decree. Morocco made recommendations.

62. Namibia commended progress in the sphere of civil and political rights. It noted strengthened human rights institutions and the new Constitution, which provided for an independent judiciary, human rights for all and equal access to the law. Namibia made recommendations.

63. The Netherlands appreciated the return to democracy, the Constitution and the Women's Plan of Action. Concerns were raised that gender equality had not been established in the Constitution and that no comprehensive law criminalized all forms of gender-based violence. The Netherlands made recommendations.

64. New Zealand welcomed recent elections, the successful first sitting of Parliament and the ILO direct contacts mission. The situation of human rights defenders was a concern. It noted investigations into violence in custody and the reconvening of the Fiji Law Society. It made recommendations.

65. Norway noted the Constitution enshrining the principles of equality, non-discrimination and an independent judiciary and establishing the rights of indigenous Fijians. The September elections were a significant step. An active role for Fiji in the HRC would be welcomed. Norway made recommendations.

66. The Philippines noted the strengthening of democratic processes and protection for vulnerable groups. It asked whether resources for socio-economic programmes had been allocated and how development partners could help, and what barriers there were to the functioning of the judiciary and how the international community could provide assistance. It made a recommendation.

67. On questions pertaining to the media, freedom of speech, expression and publication, Fiji stated that it did not accept the premise of the questions asked on the Media Industry Development Decree which implied or stated a restrictive media framework and/or censorship of the media.

68. The Fijian Constitution through its Bill of Rights, unequivocally recognized freedom of the press as pivotal in the materialization of freedom of speech, expression, thought, opinion and publication.

69. Concerns articulated that repressive laws could have the effect of severely restricting press freedom were shared by Fiji. Fiji had taken significant steps in securing greater rights and freedoms. However, Fiji stated that no country guaranteed unfettered freedom without responsibility. While guaranteeing freedom of speech, expression, thought, opinion and publication, Fiji's Constitution explicitly prohibited any speech, opinions or expressions inter alia, that was tantamount to propaganda of war; incitement of violence or insurrection against the Constitution; or advocated hatred based on any prohibited grounds of discrimination such as race, culture, ethnic or social origin, sex, gender, sexual orientation and gender identity, language, economic, social or health status, disability, age, and/or religion. Those limitations were also in consonance with General Recommendation No.35 (CERD/C/GC/35) of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination on Combating Racist Hate Speech.

70. Fiji stated that its Constitution provided a definition of hate speech that was comparable to the German model, given its long history of religious and racial intolerance. Media training to ensure that the media understood the perimeters between free speech and limitations on free speech in accordance with international law, especially from the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights, was of paramount importance.

71. The Public Emergency Regulations (PER) had been repealed. The Media Industry Development Decree 2010 through a very progressive Media Code of Ethics and the Constitution guarantee freedom of the press, protected the confidentiality of journalistic sources (consistent with the decision of the European Court of Human Rights and Article 10 of the Freedom of Expression provision in the European Convention of Human Rights), and encouraged robust debate without inciting hatred was consistent with the law on justifiable limitations to free speech under the ICCPR and the European Convention. It should be noted that the Media Code of Ethics in the Media Industry Development Decree 2010 was borrowed verbatim from the Code of Ethics adopted by the previous self-regulated Media Council.

72. Fiji stated that the Media Industry Development Authority (MIDA) had called for balanced, accurate and evidence based reporting encouraging quality journalism that was ethical and followed internationally recognized protocols of responsible journalism.

73. Fiji further reported that the Media Industry Development Decree 2010 also provided for an independent media tribunal, presided over by a High Court Judge, to adjudicate on breaches of media codes or matters relating to media disputes. Only one prosecution had taken place under MIDA, in relation to foreign ownership of a media organization. There had been no prosecution of any media organization for breaches of the code of ethics, or regarding content.

74. Fiji stated that MIDA had actively encouraged the mainstream media (both print and broadcast) to report freely and critically public opinion and views including those which were critical of Government. Additionally, Fiji stated that MIDA's consistent call for the exercise of self-regulation and continuous education of the media was consistent with UNESCO's recent call for "strengthening national legislative framework, training of journalists to build capacity and to advance media and information literacy" and "supporting media independence by promoting professional standards and self-regulation" in its report on World Trends in Freedom of Expression and Media Development.

75. Training of the media had been conducted on the Media Code of Ethics, the Bill of Rights and on reporting the elections. Collaboration with UNDP on training Fijian media on reporting parliamentary debates was anticipated. The ILO's proposal to train Fijian media on labour rights was welcomed. Those collaborative efforts between Fiji and the international community signalled an encouraging positive step towards constructive engagement in advancing freedom of the press. Civil society organizations were invited to enter into similar collaborative arrangements to further strengthen the media.

76. Portugal welcomed the Constitution, emphasized the importance of HRC special procedures and noted the participation of women in Parliament. It encouraged Fiji to enhance the participation of women in political and public affairs. It asked for information on measures to ensure gender equality in law and practice. Portugal made recommendations.

77. The Republic of Korea noted the Constitution, national election and lifting of the Public Emergency Regulations. It expressed concern at alleged human rights abuses perpetrated by police and the military, gender-based violence and reports that decrees could justify curbs of fundamental freedoms. It made recommendations.

78. The Russian Federation welcomed the new Constitution of Fiji and took positive note of the establishment of the Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission. It noted the implementation of the National Policy for Persons living with Disabilities. The Russian Federation made recommendations.

79. Sierra Leone noted the lifting of the Public Emergency Regulations, the national elections and the new constitution. It observed that the Bill of Rights contained no provisions for women's rights. It asked how children were protected from abuse at home, which challenges hindered the promotion of socio-economic rights, and what steps were taken to mitigate the effects of climate change on socio-economic rights. Sierra Leone made recommendations.

80. Singapore noted successful elections, the strengthened legislative framework and efforts to improve access to justice, including for underprivileged communities, through the Legal Aid Commission. Plans to expand poorer children's access to tertiary education and the granting of scholarships were welcomed. Singapore made recommendations.

81. Slovenia asked about the time-line for removing the death penalty from the Military Code and welcomed the Constitution and the Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination Commission. It noted that no information had been provided on sexual and reproductive health education in schools. Slovenia made recommendations.

82. Solomon Islands noted the appointment of a female Speaker following parliamentary elections and commended action on gender equality, housing and education. It encouraged the involvement of Parliamentarians in the follow-up to UPR. Interest in inviting the Special Rapporteur on the independence of judges and lawyers was noted. It made recommendations.

83. Spain commended Fiji's new Constitution's provisions on social and economic rights, recent elections, and progress regarding the right to water and the signing of CRPD.

Spain was concerned that the Essential National Industries Decree was contrary to international labour and human rights standards and low reporting rates by women of gender-based violence. Spain made recommendations.

84. Sri Lanka welcomed the Constitution and commended measures for economic growth. It asked what barriers there were to an effective judiciary and how the international community could help. Sri Lanka encouraged the provision of technical assistance and capacity building to Fiji. It made recommendations.

85. Swaziland welcomed parliamentary elections and the appointment of a female Speaker. It noted that amendments to the new Constitution required approval by a national referendum. Given allegations of the lack of consultations prior to the passing of the Constitution, Swaziland asked for the rationale behind that provision. Swaziland made a recommendation.

86. Switzerland welcomed the new Constitution and the lifting of Public Emergency Regulations. Legislation on public order, the media industry and crimes continued to disproportionately restrict freedoms of expression, assembly and association. The positive response to inviting HRC special procedures was noted. Switzerland made recommendations.

87. Thailand commended Fiji's recent democratic elections and its enhanced engagement with civil society regarding human rights. Thailand noted that women in Fiji continued to be underrepresented in decision-making and urged it to consider ratifying international human rights treaties. Thailand made recommendations.

88. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland recognized the crucial democratic steps taken by Fiji. It urged Fiji to engage constructively with NGOs ensuring they could operate freely. It noted the positive increase in female MPs but remained concerned that women were still under-represented and faced high levels of violence. It made recommendations.

89. The United Republic of Tanzania commended the Government's commitment to human rights, the new Constitution, recent democratic elections and the provision of free education. It encouraged Fiji to continue efforts to attain the right to water, housing and a clean environment. It made recommendations.

90. The United States of America urged Fiji to ensure that everyone could voice opinions and participate in politics, and to cooperate further with ILO. It was concerned at the persistence of gender-based violence, that certain decrees unduly restricted fundamental freedoms and low respect for internationally recognized labour rights. It made recommendations.

91. Uruguay encouraged Fiji to redouble its efforts regarding economic, social and cultural rights, especially for commitments to education. It hoped that the death penalty would be removed from the Military Code and urged Fiji to adopt measures consolidating respect for human rights, including for press freedom. Uruguay made recommendations.

92. Vanuatu commended the recent elections and return to democracy and congratulated it on its reinstatement as a full Commonwealth member. It noted effective strategies devised to alleviate poverty and that Fiji had signed CRPD and its Optional Protocol and currently considering extending an invitation to Special Rapporteurs. Vanuatu made recommendations.

93. Mexico recognized the efforts made since the first UPR, particularly the new Constitution and the holding of elections. It commended Fiji for being among the first Pacific nations to adopt a national policy for older persons and for removing the death penalty from the Criminal Code. Mexico made recommendations.

94. In response to a question requesting the repeal of a number of decrees, including the Administration of Justice Decree, Fiji advised that this specific Decree had been repealed in 2013 and that the repeal of any other Decrees would be the prerogative of Parliament.

95. In response to a question from Swaziland on the choice of a referendum being required for amendments to the Constitution, it was explained that a referendum was a direct form of democracy which did not entail third party intervention, and that was an important and unprecedented consultative means of amending the Constitution.

96. Responding to multiple questions on cooperation with special procedures mandate holders, Fiji expressed its willingness to cooperate with such special procedures, based on the areas of critical importance and emphasis by Fiji and provided that Fiji had the resources to receive such visits.

97. In response to a number of questions on climate change, Fiji reiterated that human rights aspects of climate change, such as the sovereignty issues faced by low lying countries facing inundation, and the human rights of peoples facing displacement as a result of climate change, must be addressed by the Council. As a Small Island Developing State at the forefront of the adverse impacts of climate change, Fiji had adopted an integrated response on climate change and disaster risk management, and adopted a Green Growth Framework which aimed at sustainable development and economic growth and resilience to the anticipated adverse effects of climate change.

98. Fiji thanked the Vice-President of the Human Rights Council for the interactive dialogue and stated that the extensive reforms conducted since the last cycle, which went beyond the requirements of international instruments, showed the long way that Fiji had come. Fiji trusts that the responses to the concerns raised have shown such progress, and the entire process and its constructive engagement will help in providing tangible benefits and substantive positive impact on the lives of individual Fijians.

II. Conclusions and/or recommendations

99. The recommendations formulated during the interactive dialogue/listed below have been examined by Fiji and enjoy the support of Fiji:
