GERMANY

- Despite its acceptance during the first UPR in 2010 of the recommendation to strengthen efforts to prevent arbitrary detention, excessive use of force during public assemblies, arbitrary arrest and detention as well as acts of torture and ill-treatment against individuals in detention by police and security forces still occur. How does the government ensure that the freedom of assembly is respected and that thorough, credible and impartial investigations into all allegations of abuse by members of the security forces take place? And if a violation is found, what steps are taken against the perpetrating individuals or institutions?
- During the 2010 review, Angola accepted three recommendations in relation to human rights defenders, committing in particular to their protection and the protection of journalists. However, human rights NGOs again and again face problems with their registration, making their work difficult. Journalists complain of being subject to increased intimidation and harassment. What steps has the government taken to ensure the safety of journalists? Are organizations that exist only in one province also invited to participate in the “Council for the official hearing and social consultation” (Conselho de Auscultação e Concertação Social (CACS))?
- Over the past years, large-scale evictions have taken place. Angola has accepted recommendations to take necessary measures to ensure that eviction is a last resort, to adopt legislation and guidelines that define the relevant circumstances and safeguards for the enforcement of the eviction, as well as the provision of necessary assistance to evicted persons. What steps has the government taken to ensure that these recommendations are realized? To what extent has the goal to build 1 million new accommodations been carried out, and how is access to this new housing space ensured?

NETHERLANDS

- Whilst recognizing the efforts made in human rights training for the police and security forces, will the Government of Angola take the appropriate measures to address concrete cases of violence and abuse by the police?
