Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review (UPR), established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its twenty-second session from 4 to 15 May 2015. The review of Maldives was held at the 6th meeting on 6 May 2015. The delegation of Maldives was headed by Ms. Dunya MAUMOON, Minister of Foreign Affairs. At its 10th meeting held on 8 May 2015, the Working Group adopted the report on Maldives
2. On 13 January 2015, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Maldives: Argentina, France and India.
3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Maldives:
 - (a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/22/MDV/1);
 - (b) A compilation prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/22/MDV/2);
 - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/22/MDV/3).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Belgium, Canada, Germany, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America was transmitted to Maldives through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the UPR.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The head of the Maldives Delegation, Her Excellency Ms Dunya MAUMOON, Minister of Foreign Affairs noted that the sense of pride and responsibility had been a defining characteristic of the Maldivian people. It was that sense that guided Maldivians to craft their own story of progress; a story of resilience; one, that the Maldivians proudly called, the “Maldivian Story”. It was reported that a significant part of the “Maldivian Story” was its constructive partnerships with international agencies and foreign governments that were serious in supporting positive changes in the Maldives.
6. The Maldives believed in the universality and equality of States under the UPR process. In preparing for its review, Maldives followed a policy of inclusivity through the UPR Standing Committee, led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, with the support of the Attorney General’s Office.
7. The delegation reported that democratisation began in the Maldives in 1932, with the first written Constitution and the introduction of universal adult suffrage. That was significantly revised with the Reform Agenda of 2004, culminating in the adoption of a new Constitution in 2008, which Maldives stated had brought a significant paradigm shift in society.
8. Maldives emphasized that fundamental rights, including freedom of expression, freedom of media, freedom from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and forced labour, that were guaranteed in the Constitution of 2008, could not be infringed, even in the event of a state of emergency.

9. Maldives stated that it had one of the most liberal interpretations of freedom of expression with no restrictions on freedom of media, ensuring the safety of journalists, and placing no restrictions on online newspapers. The protection of freedom of media was tasked to the Media Council and the Broadcasting Commission. The challenge to the Government was to balance that broad freedom with the guarantee of individual liberty.

10. Parallel to the domestic reform, the Maldives pursued an activist policy of promoting its international human rights obligations. Since 2005, the Maldives had joined seven out of the nine core human rights conventions, five optional protocols, ratified the Rome Statute of International Criminal Court, eight fundamental ILO Conventions, issued a standing invitation to all UN Special Procedures since 2005, and hosted six visits of the Rapporteurs.

11. Maldives emphasized that it had been a Muslim country for the last 800 years. The social framework and historic and traditional values had evolved over the decades, to be intimately linked to Islamic practices. Islamic values were part of the national identity and heritage, and formed the basis of the Constitution, and all Maldives laws. The delegation stated that calls to introduce values and practices that were contrary to the values of Islam, such as non-traditional forms of families, and LGBT, would not be entertained by the people of Maldives. It also reported that the basic belief in Islam as an integral part of the Maldivian identity would not change. Maldives stated that it continued to allow non-Maldivians to practice their own faith in private.

12. Maldives stated that the human rights policy of President Yameen was guided by the belief, that although providing the basic framework, human rights were not just about international instruments or pieces of law. Human rights was about belief, that needed to be carefully cultivated and nurtured, and needed space and time to grow organically and become valued and cherished traditions in the societies concerned.

13. The delegation stated that the new school curriculum, which offered civic education as a component in order to cultivate values and belief in human rights, was an integral part of continuing the successful story of the Education sector. In order to ensure equal access to all children, to the fundamental right of education, the Maldives offered free education up to higher secondary level, free textbooks and stationery, and free local and international exams.

14. The Maldives had introduced universal health insurance across the country, which enabled access to health care for people of all socio-economic backgrounds. The Maldives stated that its maternal and infant mortality rates were on par with developed countries and well above the global average. It also reported that vaccine preventable diseases, such as neonatal tetanus, whooping cough, polio, and diphtheria, were non-existent; malaria had been successfully controlled for decades; the Maldives continued to maintain low prevalence of HIV/AIDS; and there was sustained investment in improving the quality of access and delivery of health services.

15. Maldives noted that successive governments had adopted social housing schemes as the best way to provide affordable housing to all. Over the last few years, the Government had built over two thousand six hundred housing units that had met the housing needs of over seventeen thousand people.

16. The Government had prioritised skills development and job creation for the youth. Over the last seventeen months, more than seven thousand jobs had been created, and several skills development programmes have been launched.

17. The Government believed in addressing the growing problem of drug abuse and gang violence through empowering the youth. The enactment of the Drug Act and the Gang Violence Act, provided the legal framework in dealing with that issue. A separate court had been established under the Drug Act, to hear drug related cases; and there was a conscious shift in policy towards rehabilitation and re-introduction of addicts into society, with Drug Rehabilitation Centres across the country. The Government stated that it had criminalised gang violence and organised crime, and moved rapidly to correct the infringement of human rights violations through gang activities.

18. The Maldives stated that it had always maintained a policy of moderation and openness, rejected all forms of extremism and introversion, radical interpretations of Islam, and denounced and condemned terrorist activities in the name of Islam. The Government announced that it had drafted an entirely new Counter-Terrorism and Prevention Bill that would make it a serious criminal offense for Maldivians to take part in any kind of armed activities overseas, except where the military or police officials operate under a formal arrangement.

19. The Government was currently implementing a strategy aimed at increasing awareness about the value of moderation, tolerance, and the peaceful nature of Islam. It was also targeting other practices associated with radicalism, including the instances of limited under-age marriage, forced marriage, non-vaccination of infants, and deprivation of school enrolment of girls and children.

20. Maldives reported that the Domestic Violence Prevention Act, the Prevention of Sexual Harassment and Abuse Act, and Sexual Offences Act had strengthened the legal framework to protect women, children, and migrants from violence and sexual abuse. The Gender Equality Bill, which was currently in its final stages, once passed, would, according to the Maldives, cement the national standards on gender equality, and confirm that policies and the legal framework were consistent with CEDAW. The Disability Act had boosted the protection and rights afforded to persons with disabilities, giving persons with disabilities access to financial assistance, and establishing regulations on minimum standards and identification of persons with disabilities, and room for affirmative action, including access to gainful employment.

21. Maldives stated that the Anti-Trafficking Act was a milestone in combating trafficking in the country, especially affording protection to the large number of migrant workers in the country from exploitation. The National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons for 2015-2019 had been finalised. The Government also announced that the Parliament had on 27 April 2015, approved the Maldives accession to the Optional Protocol to prevent, suppress and punish trafficking in persons, especially women and children.

22. The delegation reported that Maldivian women had the constitutional right to vote since 1932, and equal pay, and paid maternity leave; women had the same access to education and employment opportunities. The Government reported that it was now concentrating on making women economically empowered by introducing targeted micro-loans, single mother benefits, home-based employment opportunities, and day-care facilities. The Government aimed to empower women to become more productive citizens of the country, in whatever capacity they choose for themselves, free from coercion or social pressure.

23. The Government expressed its belief that the progress Maldives had made in the areas of governance, and social and economic development, could be fully realized and sustained over time by creating the necessary enabling institutions. Maldives stated that political tensions arose because the speed of institutional development had been slow and the institutional shape and structure envisioned in the Constitution was still not complete; the gap between the socio-economic growth and the emergence of strong political institutions was still not entirely filled.

24. Maldives stated that the President's comprehensive strategy for democracy consolidation aimed at transforming the Maldivian society into a political community that was able to forge an overwhelming consensus on the acceptability of the political system.

25. The delegation reported that a significant component of the democracy consolidation strategy was the justice sector strategic action plan, which recognized the judiciary's continuous efforts to improve access to, the effectiveness, and the functioning of, the system. Maldives stated that the new Penal Code would play a pivotal role in achieving these targets. A Legal Profession Bill, to implement the United Nations Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, was being drafted. Several key pieces of legislations, such as the Anti-Torture Act, the Prison and Parole Act, the Anti-Money Laundering and Terrorism Financing Act, Extradition, Mutual Legal Assistance on Criminal Matters and Transfer of Prisoners, had been passed, that would enhance the effectiveness in the delivery of services in the justice sector. Maldives also stated that it was continuously working with international human rights mechanisms aimed at strengthening the judiciary, and in training and building the capacity of judges to encourage the growth of the judiciary, into a strong, robust arm of the State, which enjoyed strong public support.

26. According to the Maldives, the progress achieved, within only a span of ten years, was by any measure, remarkable. Among the many remaining challenges, was the incredibly high economic cost of bringing the systemic changes envisioned in the 2008 Constitution, and the speed of the change, which had not given adequate time for the country, to develop a pool of human resources with sufficient capacity, to transform the changes into norms in the society. Those challenges had been further heightened by the fact that the Maldivian democracy is "growing up" under the international spotlight.

27. The delegation stated that, while the Government appreciated the well-meaning and well-intended commentaries, and valuable advice, it urged to not only criticise, but also to invest in bringing about meaningful change. The Maldives stated that meaningful democratic change could not be imposed, and could only be sustained if the change were locally owned, locally driven, and locally shaped. Maldives reported that it was also important to let democratic institutions have the space and the independence to grow organically.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

28. During the interactive dialogue, 102 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

29. Mauritius welcomed achievements in education, health and housing, the new Ministry of Law and Gender and law against domestic violence.

30. Mexico recognized Maldives' cooperation with human rights mechanisms and hoped for the strengthening of the independence of the Human Rights Commission and actions addressing drug abuse.

31. Montenegro commended efforts to combat child, early and forced marriages and trafficking, and asked about measures to combat corporal punishment.

32. Morocco appreciated strengthened access to education, housing and health care and welcomed measures for the empowerment of women.

33. Namibia acknowledged challenges facing Maldives due to the dispersed population over a vast geographic area and admired their advancement to developing country status.
34. Nepal noted remarkable progress in development, including achievements in curbing infant and maternal mortality and challenges of religious extremism and high drug abuse.
35. The Netherlands appreciated positive amendments to key legislation but was concerned that many first UPR-cycle recommendations remained to be implemented.
36. New Zealand was concerned about recent trends in relation to freedom of expression, fair trial, and independence of the judiciary.
37. Nicaragua noted improvements made to universal access to rights to education, health, housing and justice, especially for vulnerable groups.
38. Niger noted Maldives' important contribution to the Human Rights Council, many ratifications and initiatives for migrant workers.
39. Nigeria commended achievements in health, housing and education and the strengthened legislative framework on human rights.
40. Norway raised concerns, including lack of respect for fair trial and due process, and urged the reversal of trends undermining democratic principles.
41. Oman commended efforts to promote and protect human rights, especially for minors, and training of law enforcement officials.
42. Pakistan commended efforts to modernize national legislation and strengthen the legal framework to promote and protect human rights.
43. Paraguay noted advances such as criminalizing marital rape but remained concerned at acts of gender discrimination and discrimination based on religion.
44. Peru emphasized such advances as the Social Health Insurance Act introducing universal healthcare, and ratification of the Rome Statute.
45. The Philippines commended Maldives' rights-based approach to climate change and disaster risk reduction and new law against sexual abuse, including marital rape.
46. Portugal welcomed the signing of the Rome Statute and shared Maldives' concerns regarding displacement due to environmental causes.
47. Qatar appreciated legislation and policies on education, health, housing, persons with disabilities, protecting women and children and preventing trafficking.
48. Republic of Korea noted efforts to protect vulnerable groups with the Domestic Violence Prevention Act and the draft Child Rights Bill.
49. Republic of Moldova welcomed measures to safeguard against child, early and forced marriage and asked about the study on child sexual exploitation.
50. The Russian Federation welcomed the reforms in the area of criminal justice, including the adoption of the Criminal Code.
51. Rwanda commended progress achieved in health and the provision of free education and affordable and safe housing.
52. Saudi Arabia commended the ratification of treaties, protocols and ILO Conventions and for polio eradication, free education, adequate housing and combating domestic violence.
53. Senegal welcomed ratification of fundamental ILO Conventions, visits of UN mandate-holders and major progress in education, health, housing and women's rights.

54. Seychelles commended the great steps taken towards a human rights-based approach to protecting the environment and combatting climate change.
55. Sierra Leone appreciated universal healthcare, free education and the Anti-Torture Act, urged greater protection for migrant workers and human rights defenders and called for climate change adaptation assistance.
56. Singapore welcomed commitment to promote health services, eliminate discrimination and violence against women.
57. Slovenia welcomed criminalization of domestic violence and marital rape, hoped for ratification of OP-ICESCR and OP-CRC-IC and was concerned at limitations on freedoms, improper functioning of the judiciary and impunity.
58. Spain praised progress in the new Criminal Code but was concerned about the application of the death penalty to minors.
59. Sri Lanka noted progress since the 2008 Constitution's enactment and stressed the importance of upholding the rule of law and observing due process at all times.
60. The delegation referred to Maldives' acceptance of 89 recommendations out of a possible 126 and that it was able to implement fully a total of 58 accepted recommendations and had partially implemented 32 recommendations.
61. Maldives stated that its susceptibility to climate change and adverse impacts was a hindrance to the full enjoyment of human rights including the right to adequate housing and to development gains achieved over decades. On climate change the Government took a rights-based approach aiming at supporting livelihoods and communities struggling to adapt to climate change.
62. Maldives clarified that under the Human Rights Commission Act of 2006 and subsequent amendments in 2014, Commission members and staff enjoyed immunity from prosecution or complaint for acts done in good faith within the purview of their functions. Pointing to issues relating to the Suo Motu application filed against the members of the Human Rights Commission in 2014, as the matter had yet to be decided Maldives deemed it inappropriate to comment on the matter just yet.
63. Regarding challenges faced by local civil society organizations, the Government had already identified the many shortcomings of the 2003 Societies Act and had proposed revision of the law, including moving the political office of the Registrar of Societies to one of the independent statutory standing offices appointed by the Parliament.
64. On clarifying issues related to the protection and rights of migrant workers, Maldives stated that migration was a key issue of concern and a continuous challenge for the Government. The Constitution did not discriminate against migrants in relation to entitlement to just and safe conditions of work, fair wages and equal remuneration, regardless of the person's nationality, race or religion, nor did the 2008 Employment Act. However, a difference did exist where a migrant worker's employment was terminated, the almost immediate revocation of the employment visa created a huge barrier to recourse to the employment tribunal.
65. State of Palestine welcomed the implementation of recommendations from the first cycle particularly on child rights, right to education and rights of persons with disabilities.
66. Sudan commended the constructive engagement with international human rights mechanisms, the standing invitation to special procedures and hosting of visits.
67. Sweden noted reported steps to combat discrimination and violence against women, and warnings of deterioration in the independence of the justice system.

68. Switzerland expressed concern about shortcomings in the judicial system, deterioration of freedom of expression and intimidation of the national human rights institution.
69. Thailand encouraged continued engagement with the National Human Rights Commission, civil society and the international community and welcomed free education and universal healthcare.
70. Timor-Leste welcomed enactment of legislation against domestic violence and the Constitution's prohibition of racial discrimination.
71. Trinidad and Tobago congratulated Maldives on its 50th anniversary of independence, which offered an opportunity to reflect on the role of human rights in consolidating democracy, and acknowledged the new Ministry, climate change and education policies.
72. Tunisia noted progress achieved highlighting the ratification of international human rights instruments, including the Rome Statute.
73. Turkey welcomed improvements in education, housing and healthcare and steps taken to combat human trafficking and encouraged strengthened efforts regarding women's rights.
74. Turkmenistan welcomed the measures to strengthen the national institutional infrastructure for promoting human rights.
75. Ukraine commended adoption of anti-trafficking and domestic violence laws and encouraged Maldives to continue its active stance in the Human Rights Council, including in preventing human rights violations.
76. United Arab Emirates commended progress in free education, respecting the principle of equality before the law, and providing equal judicial protection in compliance with Maldives' obligations.
77. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland welcomed legislative progress, remained concerned over the death penalty, corporal punishment, due process and arrest of opposition leaders, and urged restraint and dialogue by all parties and the Government.
78. United States of America was concerned that recent developments called into question the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, the use of politically-motivated prosecutions against critics, that non-Muslims could not become citizens and the lack of labour laws.
79. Uruguay highlighted measures to implement recommendations accepted during the first review, including ratification of International Labour Organization fundamental conventions.
80. Uzbekistan welcomed the legislative and institutional improvements, accession to treaties and cooperation with OHCHR, treaty bodies and special procedures.
81. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela appreciated the geographic and climate change challenges, commended free education and social housing. It appealed for a resumption of political dialogue, involving all stakeholders to bring about peace, and efforts to achieve national reconciliation.
82. Viet Nam welcomed the remarkable progress made in the areas of education, housing, health care, access to justice, women's rights and the rights of the child.
83. Yemen noted measures taken to strengthen the criminal justice sector and to join a number of international treaties and protocols.

84. Afghanistan appreciated enhanced educational programmes and the 'No Child Left Behind' policy.
85. Albania noted progress with the adoption of the Domestic Violence, Sexual Harassment and Abuse Prevention Acts.
86. Algeria welcomed the adoption of the law against domestic violence and efforts to adopt a law on the elimination of racial discrimination.
87. Angola was pleased at many ratifications and acceptance of special procedure mandate-holders' visits.
88. Argentina welcomed efforts in the area of gender, including the adoption of the Domestic Violence Prevention Act.
89. Australia expressed concern at the conduct of the trial of former President Nasheed, subsequent unrest and death penalty regulations. Australia commended progress on domestic violence.
90. Azerbaijan appreciated Maldives' graduation from Least Developed Countries and noted OHCHR's recent visit as demonstrating the importance attached to UN mechanisms.
91. Bahrain commended steps taken in the education field and ensuring local and international exams were free of charge.
92. Bangladesh welcomed measures to safeguard women and children's rights, acknowledged the impact of climate change, noted family breakdowns compelling youth to join gangs and hoped for success in strengthening democracy, rule of law and an independent judiciary.
93. Barbados noted gains in protecting the rights of vulnerable groups, climate change challenges and encouraged Maldives' to continue fully implementing accepted recommendations and human rights cooperation.
94. Replying to the advanced questions and recommendations made regarding enforcement of the practice of flogging and the enforcement of the death penalty, Maldives wished to ensure all partners that it remained committed that the legislative and judicial framework involved in cases of flogging was strengthened and informed that the Government remained dedicated towards further strengthening those systems and processes involved and looked forward to any kind of support from partners. Similarly with the enforcement of the death penalty, Maldives stated that it would not be resorted to unless it was endorsed by all court tiers and was in line with all regulations and procedures.
95. Belgium welcomed efforts to follow-up on the outcome of the first UPR and hoped for increased space in the future for a free civil society and media.
96. Bhutan noted initiatives in education, gender equality and in bringing climate change issues to the international forefront.
97. Botswana commended enactment of Acts for the protection of women, noted challenges in addressing climate change, and was concerned at reported trafficking and the inadequacy, judicial interference and politicisation of the Judicial Service Commission.
98. Brazil congratulated enactment of Acts to prevent domestic violence, sexual offences, harassment and abuse and the commitment to submit a Gender Equality Bill.
99. Brunei Darussalam commended progress in promoting women's empowerment and pledges to ensure housing.
100. Cabo Verde noted positive policies on free education, universal healthcare, social housing and climate change and Government's determination to consolidate democracy.

101. Canada made recommendations.
102. Chad noted climate change challenges and encouraged the international community to assist in resolving them.
103. Chile valued progress, particularly in ratifying international human rights treaties, improving legislation and implementing programmes.
104. China welcomed measures on free education, housing and universal health coverage and for combating violence sexual exploitation and trafficking, and Maldives' willingness to strengthen the criminal justice system.
105. Costa Rica recognized progress in the implementation of recommendations and the mid-term report submitted in 2013.
106. Côte d'Ivoire welcomed cooperation with international mechanisms and encouraged strengthened measures to combat religious discrimination and violence against vulnerable groups, and promote gender equality.
107. Croatia welcomed the emphasis on mainstreaming human rights values and encouraged continued work to ensure the full and equal enjoyment of all human rights for all without distinction.
108. Cuba recognized progress, including the Anti-Torture Act, free education and universal healthcare, and challenges in consolidating the democratic process and agreed on the need for the international community to cooperate with the Government to achieve objectives it had set.
109. The Democratic Republic of the Congo identified the need for policies to combat racial and religious discrimination and eliminate female genital mutilation.
110. Denmark expressed concern about the irregularities of the court case against former President Nasheed, which questioned judicial independence.
111. Ecuador recognized the importance that Maldives attached to the contribution of Parliaments to the implementation of UPR recommendations and welcomed the Social Security Act.
112. Egypt commended accomplishments including in health, social housing, education, women rights, and acknowledged national ownership for democratic consolidation.
113. Equatorial Guinea, in this Golden Jubilee year, welcomed the remarkable progress in education, reducing inequality and strengthening youth empowerment.
114. Ethiopia commended progress in education and housing and commitments to address inequality and protect religious minorities to worship freely.
115. Fiji noted many similar challenges faced in the context of democratic transition, meeting Constitutional obligations in line with human rights and climate change.
116. France commended ratification of the Rome Statute but deplored that the judicial system did not allow for fair and just trials to be held.
117. Germany welcomed passage of the Anti-Torture and Anti-Human Trafficking Acts but was concerned at reported human rights violations, which contributed to a climate of growing fear and reduced space for public discussion.
118. Ghana welcomed such achievements as the draft bill on Gender Equality but was concerned at the case initiated by the Supreme Court against the Human Rights Commission and called for that decision to be rescinded.

119. Greece appreciated recent ratifications, adoption of the Anti-Torture and right to information Acts and the draft gender equality law which sought to increase compliance with CEDAW.
120. Honduras commended efforts to strengthen the institutional and democratic framework, including establishing the Human Rights Commission.
121. India referred to the importance of adherence to due process, safeguarding the space for legitimate political dissent, scrutinizing the exploitation of migrant workers and reinforcing efforts to address drug addiction, gang-violence and organized crime.
122. Indonesia hoped that democracy consolidation integrated with respect for human rights would continue and take root and noted migration as a remaining challenge.
123. Iraq welcomed adoption and harmonization of domestic law with international commitments, cooperation with special procedures, ratifications and policies on education.
124. Ireland shared concerns about the deterioration in respect for the rule of law and independence of the judiciary.
125. Italy welcomed progress in education and health, development achievements and engagement in strengthening the judiciary.
126. Jordan appreciated enactment of the Education and Disability Acts, ratifications and strengthening of the Human Rights Commission.
127. Kazakhstan appreciated measures to combat gender-based violence and to strengthen legislation, including for protecting disabled persons and trafficking victims.
128. Kenya welcomed enhanced social protection and services and the achievement of MDG's 4-6, ratifications and noted concerning challenges in the administration of justice and rule of law.
129. Kuwait commended adoption of policies to promote human rights and equality and the invitation to mandate holders to visit Maldives.
130. Latvia welcomed efforts to address human rights in collaboration with mandate holders, including challenges related to judicial independence, women's and children's rights and a safe and enabling environment for civil society and journalists.
131. Lebanon welcomed the adoption of the Anti-Human Trafficking and Anti-Torture Acts.
132. Libya commended the positive interaction with human rights mechanisms and the adoption of Anti-violence and human trafficking and access to information Acts.
133. Liechtenstein acknowledged the commitment to international justice, but remained concerned at reported barriers facing women accessing justice.
134. Madagascar observed significant progress in social protection, employment, access to health care and free education.
135. Malaysia acknowledged efforts to strengthen legislative measures to combat violence against women.
136. Mauritania appreciated improvements to the legal framework, ratifications and timely reporting.
137. Maldives reiterated that criticism of the trial and sentencing of former President Nasheed for the abduction or enforced disappearance of a sitting judge in 2012 has focussed on the process and not on the merits of the case. The case had highlighted the profound need to bring urgent reforms to the judiciary as identified in the 2004 reform agenda. While the Criminal Code had been adopted, remaining legislation, such as the criminal procedure code, was still with Parliament. In the spirit of showing maximum transparency, the Government invited the OHCHR, the Commonwealth and the EU to send observers to observe the appeal process. Maldives stated that immediately after the Government had sent out those invitations the former President announced his decision not to appeal his case.

138. Regarding the issue of the recent demonstrations held in Malé, which were organized by the religious party the Adhaalath Party, the delegation reiterated that the protests became violent when the organizers confronted and physically assaulted the police. The Maldives Police Service did not use excessive or deadly force in the matter.

139. In recognition of many concerns raised, the Government would make every effort in further strengthening the judiciary. The Government was working closely with its partners, such as the Commonwealth, in examining some of the specific aspects of the Constitutional structure with a view to instituting a comprehensive review. Extensive work is also being done with such partners as UNDP in developing a judicial training curriculum to be adopted at the judicial training institute to be established next year. To complement those reforms the Attorney-General's office through its strategic action plan of 2014 has already identified the need for more legislation such as the Legal Profession Act that enabled the establishment of an independent bar association.

140. Maldives thanked all delegations for their statements, comments and recommendations. Full note had been taken of them and they would be given maximum consideration.
