

Nuba children's drawing was obtained by Waging Peace in December 2018 on a visit to Yida and Ajong Thok refugee camps in South Sudan, bordering Sudan. Pictured is one of 60 drawings collected from children ages 6-19 depicting their experiences including atrocity crimes and persecution.

This drawing by anonymous shows how civilian life in South Kordofan was disrupted by uniformed and military attackers which invariably caused communities to flee and seek refuge.

SUDAN

THIRD CYCLE UNIVERSAL PERIODIC REVIEW

JOINT STAKEHOLDER'S SUBMISSION WAGING PEACE AND HUMAN RIGHTS AND DEVELOPMENT ORGANISATION (HUDO CENTRE)

MARCH 2021

1. This report is submitted by Human Rights and Development Organization (HUDO Centre) and Waging Peace as part of Sudan's third cycle universal periodic review (UPR).
2. The HUDO Centre is an independent, non-government, non-partisan and non-profit making organisation based in Kampala, Uganda. HUDO monitors the human rights situation in Sudan. This includes conditions and rights of civilians in conflict areas, religious rights, freedom of expression, observing human rights-related court trials, and other violations. Monitoring is focused on areas under control of the Sudan government in South Kordofan and Blue Nile States together with IDPs from the two areas. HUDO was registered in Sudan on 25 October 2009 but the license was revoked in 2011, which forced HUDO to move Uganda, where it has been registered since 2013.
3. Waging Peace was founded in 2004, and documents human rights abuses in Sudan with the aim of raising awareness of such abuses in the British establishment and public. They support Sudanese asylum-seekers, refugees, and wider UK-based community to build meaningful lives. They also convene a UK working group bringing together partners from civil society with think tanks and foundations working in humanitarian, development, human rights, peacebuilding, and foreign policy sectors.
4. During the second cycle of the universal periodic review, Sudan received over 300 recommendations on the protection of civil, political, economic, social, and cultural rights. These included to consider ratifying the Convention Against Torture (CAT) and the Convention for the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW).
5. The State Party accepted recommendations during the second UPR cycle on the general protection of human rights¹, international humanitarian law², impunity³, the rights of women and children⁴, torture and ill treatment⁵, arbitrary detention⁶, and freedom of religion or belief⁷. In December 2018, sustained nationwide peaceful protests started in Blue Nile State calling for President Omar al Bashir to resign. This call succeeded in April 2019: the former President was detained, and the military took control, creating a Transitional Military Council (TMC). The TMC ruled until a power-sharing agreement was signed in August 2019 with civilians. Despite the significant political changes, serious and egregious human rights violations continue to be recorded in the two areas: South Kordofan and Blue Nile States. This report focuses specifically on the government-controlled zones in the two areas and the violations that continue. For this report we have chosen to focus on the period after the ouster of former President Omar al Bashir in April 2019. Our assessment is that regressive acts continue and that the State Party is failing to protect the rights of citizens, and particularly vulnerable and marginalised communities. In each of these areas Sudan has not implemented most of the recommendations made in the previous UPR cycle.

SCOPE OF INTERNATIONAL OBLIGATIONS

6. Sudan is a party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural rights (ICESCR), and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD). In practice, domestic legislation, policy, and actions of state actors were not consistent with these obligations despite positive steps having been taken towards reforming domestic legislation, the constitution, and the ratification of CAT under the leadership of the Transitional Government.

Despite the changes at the national level, members of the Nuba community in South Kordofan are targeted by armed groups and security apparatus. These cases further demonstrate the failure of the State Party to address human rights violations in South Kordofan and racial discrimination that is evident in the country.

Churches set on fire twice in Bout

53. On 16 January 2020, the Sudan Internal Church, Catholic Church, and the Orthodox Church in Bout town were set on fire by arsonists. The churches reported both attacks, but the police did not investigate or put in place protective measures. Due to lack of investigation of these attacks, police left churches vulnerable to attack twice, therefore this recommendation has not been fully implemented.⁶⁴

REFUGEES FROM THE TWO AREAS

57. We know that refugees from South Kordofan seem unwilling to return to the area, and continue living in Yida, Ajong Thok and Pamir refugee camps in neighbouring South Sudan. In December 2018, Waging Peace travelled to Yida and Ajong Thok where they spoke to refugees who told them how unsafe they felt. Their fears were compounded by the political battle over the area itself, with the United Nations and other related agencies wanting residents to move to camps away from the border in response to Sudan's fears that Yida was being used to house armed movements and their families. At that time, cross-border humanitarian aid was a sticking point in negotiations between the SPLM-N and al Bashir's government. Despite meagre options, everyone Waging Peace spoke to adamantly refused to eat food that had passed through Khartoum or its proxies. Waging Peace also spoke to children and collected 60 children's drawings of devastating images of atrocity crimes they had witnessed, a sample of which is on the cover page of this document.
